A POEM WITH A MORAL.

[The following lines were written by David Barker for the New York Post about twenty years ago, and are as admirable for their quaintness as for the important lesson they convey.]

THE LION AND THE SKUNK—A DREAM.

I met a lion in my path,
(Twas on a dreary autumn night),
Who gave me the alternative
To ither run or fight.

I dare not turn upon the track,
I dare not think to run away,
For fear the lion at my back
Would seize me as his prey.

So summoning a fearless
Though all my soul was full of fright,
I said unto the forest king,
"I will not run, but fight."

We fought, and as the fates decreed,
I conquered in the bloody fray;
For soon the lion at my feet
A lifeless carcass lay.

A little skunk was standing by
And noted what the lion spoke;
And when he saw the lion die,
The lion's track he took.

He used the lion's very speech,
And stretching to his utmost height,
He gave me the alternative
To either run or fight.

I saw he was prepared to fling
Vile odors from his bushy tail,
And knew those odors very soon
My nostrils would assail.

So summoning a humble air,
Though all my soul was free from fright,
I said unto the dirty brute,
"I'll run, but will not fight."

MORAL.

As years begin to cool my blood,
I'd rather all would doubt my spunk
Than for a moment undertake
To battle with a skunk.

WAITING FOR AN ANSWER.

My story? my life? Oh, it has been too uneventful, too simple in its incidents. I could tell you the sorrows of others, but my own—well, well! as you will. You shall hear. The wound has never healed, and if I put my hand above it, the place still throbs, even as it will beat and ache till kindly nature says to me, "Sleep, poor weary one, and rest." And then peacefully, trustingly, and with a simple hope of forgiveness, may I sleep that long sleep which they say so flippantly has no waking, but which has a waking, as every lesson which we learn in life persists in teaching us.

You will smile, perhaps, when I tell you that I was once what people called pretty—that this pale-hued face was once plump and rosy, these sad eyes bright, and this gray, scant hair golden-brown, long, and flowing. But why should I think you would smile? Do I not know that you must have seen the gay young plant putting out its tender leaves in spring, growing green and luxuriant of foliage in summer, ripe and ruddy in autumn, and gray, bent, and withered in age? And should I be pitied because I have but followed in the way of nature? Surely not. It is not for that I ask your sympathy, but for the blight that fell upon the young plant and seared and scratched it so that it seemed for months that it would die; but it lived, as I have lived to tell you this.

Do you know that wondrous feeling which comes in the early year, and that strange sense of keen delight, that elasticity of spirit, when, full of youth and hope, the very tears of joyous sensibility start to the eyes as you wander amidst the trees and flowers in spring? I remember how I felt, oh! so well, even though it is now forty years ago, and I was 20.

Jack and I were engaged. It was all such a simple homely affair. We had known one another for years—the children of neighboring farmers. Jack—I still call him by the simple old pet name of those days—Jack had been away at a good school, and being bright and shrewd and clever he had won his way on, taking to engineering instead of his father's farm life, and now it had come to this that he had been staying at home for a month previous to going out to a good appointment in Melbourne.

That month in spring, how it passed! We had met again and again, and in his honest, manly way, he had asked me to be his wife.

"You know, Grace, that I have always loved you," he said; "and now I have hopes and prospects, it cannot be wrong to ask you for your promise."

We were walking by the river-side as he said this, and how well I can picture it all—the soft gliding water mirroring the trees on the opposite bank, the young, green buds just breaking from their cases, and, above all, the soft tender blue of the spring sky—the blue, he had told me, that was like my eyes.

"Do you want me to promise, Jack?" I said simply, as I looked up in his face.

"No, darling; I am satisfied," he cried, as his strong arms held me to his broad breast, and that was all. No oaths could have bound me more tightly to him. I felt that I was his wife when he should come to claim me.

We were late that evening, and entered the house shyly, for there had been so much to talk of and plan. In a month's time Jack was to sail for Melbourne; then he was to work very hard for three years, and come and fetch me to be his wife.

That month glided by, and the last day had come. It was, as I told you, spring-time—joyous spring-time, with the hawthorn's snowy blossoms, the apple-trees pink and the pear-trees pearly with their pyramids of flowers. Every meadow I passed was starred with golden butter-cups, and from every spray the birds trilled or jerked forth their merry songs of hope and love.

I could not feel sad, even though I was going to meet Jack for the last walk before he went away; but, as I said, mingled with the feelings of ecstasy there was a strange tearfulness of eye, and my breath would come at times with a sob.

He was by the stile, waiting for me—the stile down by the long mead, half-way between the two farms—and, as he took my hands in his, we neither of us spoke, but stood gazing away over woodlawn and meadow, all clad in their wondrous beauty, and listened to the birds. Now it was the soft tender coo of the stock-dove from the wood, now the jerked-out song of the linnets; then, soft and mellow, from the thick hedge-rows floated towards us the fluty notes of the blackbird, while on high trilled away the larks, singing one against the other to their mates, sitting in the tall grass of the golden meads.

We could not talk, our hearts were too full, for Jack was to be off at daybreak the next morning. But there was no need for words. We loved each other in the simple, nature-taught way that has been since the world began, and we knew that every joyous song around that thrilled upon our ears meant love, and even in our sorrow we were happy.

"Only three years, darling," Jack whispered to me, "and then ——"

The tears rose to my eyes as I tried to answer him, but I could not speak a word.

"And you will let me find a long letter when I get there?" he said tenderly.

"Yes, Jack, I promise," I said, and then it was time to return, for the hours had glided by, how we could not tell.

Jack spent the evening with us at home and then he left us hurriedly, for our farewells had been said in the wood, and it was one hearty kiss, given and taken before the old people, and then good-bye.

But I saw him pass soon after daybreak and he saw me and waved his hand, for I had sat by the window all night, lest I might let him go by and I asleep.

And then time glided on sadly, but pleasantly as well. Mine was a busy life, for soon my father took to his bed, ill—a bed he never left again, for he gradually sank and died, leaving my poor mother in very indifferent circumstances.

It was a hard blow for us both, for he had been one of the kindest and truest of men, but while poor mother pined and waited, I had my hopeful days in view, and from time to time letters from dear Jack, all so true and honest and full of trust in the future that I felt as if I could not repine even when greater troubles fell upon me.

For at the end of two years I was standing by the bed-side where lay poor mother, sinking fast. She had no particular ailment, but had literally pined and wasted away. The bird had lost its mate of many years, and when at last she kissed me and said "good-by," it seemed to me to be in a quiet, rest-seeking spirit, and she spoke like one looking hopefully forward to the meeting with him who had gone before.

But she could think of me even then, and almost the last whispered words were:

"Only eleven months, Grace, and then he will be back to fetch you."

Poor mother! she would not have passed so peacefully away if she had known that which I withheld—namely, the news that came to me from our lawyer. For, through thefailure of the enterprise in which my father's savings had been invested, and which brought us a little income of £60 a year, I was left penniless—so poor in fact, that the furniture of the cottage in the little town, to which we had moved when we left the farm, had to be sold to defray the funeral expenses.

It was very hard to bear, and for a month I was terribly depressed; but there was that great hopeful time, ever drawing near—the end of the three years, when Jack would come to fetch me to be his wife.

It was now for the first time that I remember feeling particular about my personal appearance, and I studied my glass to see if Jack would find me looking careworn and thin, and my glass told me truly—yes.

But I had to be up and doing, and before another month was over, through the kindness of people whom we had known, I was placed where I could work contentedly for the bread I must earn till Jack should come to fetch me away.

It was at a large West End dress-maker's, and it was hard work to get used to the hurry and excitement of the place, where there were twelve girls living in the house, and as many more came every day.

There were all kinds of petty pieces of tyranny to submit to at first, and I suppose some of the foolish girls were jealous of me and my looks, so much so that I found they nicknamed me "The Beauty." Poor girls! If they had only known how little store I set by my looks they would have behaved at first as they did later on.

The first thing that won them to me was when Mary Sanders was taken ill with a terrible fever. Mme. Grainger was for sending her away at once, on account of her business and the infection, but the doctor who was called in, a young, impetuous, but very clever man, told her that it would be at her peril if she did so, for Mary Sanders' life was in danger. So the poor girl was shut up in her bedroom without a soul to go near her except a hired nurse, and after the first night this woman staid away.

No one dared go near the poor girl then, so I timidly asked leave to nurse her, for I felt no fear of the infection, and it seemed so hard for her to be left there alone.

I obtained leave, and went up-stairs, staying with her till she recovered; and from that day there was always a kind look for me and a kiss from every girl in the place.

What was more, oddly enough, perhaps because I was so quiet and restrained, first one girl and then another came to make me the confidant of her love secrets and ask my advice.

I gave it, such as it was, though heart-sore myself, for Jack's letters to me had suddenly ceased. We had corresponded so regularly; but it had struck me that his last two letters had been formal and constrained; they were full of business matters too, and he had hinted at its being possible that he should not be able to keep time about the three years, in consequence of some contract.

I did not think this when I first read these letters, for then I had kissed and cried over them, but when no reply came to my last, I re-read them, and the coldness seemed apparent.

But I waited and waited, and then news came from the country. Jack's father, a widower, had died suddenly; and I said to myself, with throbbing heart, as I longed to be at his side to try and comfort him in his affliction, "Poor Jack, he will come home now."

But he did not come, neither did I get any reply to my last two letters. Another month and the three years would be up; and, as I sat over some work one spring morning by the open window, with a bunch of violets that one of the girls had brought me in a glass, the soft breeze that came floating over the chimney-pots and sooty roofs wafted to me the scent of the humble little blossoms, and my eyes became full of tears, for in an instant the busy work-room had passed away, and I was down home by the river-side listening to dear Jack, as he asked me to be his wife.

Only a month! only a month! my pulses seemed to beat; and as it happened we were all busy upon a large wedding order, and I was stitching away at the white satin skirt intended for the bride.

I tried so hard to bear it, but I could not; the rush of feelings was too great. Another month and he was to have fetched me to be his wife, and I had not had an answer to my last two fond and loving letters.

As I said, I tried hard to bear it, but I could not, and stifling a sob I hurried out of the workroom to reach my attic, throw myself upon my knees by the bed, and burying my face in my hands I sobbed as if my heart would break.

For a terrible thought would come now, fight against it as I would—"Jack had grown tired of waiting, and has married another."

I fought so hard with the disloyal thought, but it would come, and I was sobbing passionately, when I felt a soft arm steal round my neck, a tender cheek laid to mine, and I found my poor tear-dewed face drawn down upon the bosom of Mary Sanders, who had stolen out of the workroom, and come up to try and comfort me.

"Pray, pray, don't fret, my darling," she whispered. "Madame will be so cross. Those wedding things must be in by to-night, and they want you to help try them on."

I don't know how I got through that day and night, but I believe I did such duties as were expected from me mechanically, or as if I had been in a dream, and at night I lay wakeful and weary, with aching eyes and heart, thinking of that dreadful idea that was trying to force itself upon me.

I waited till the three years had expired, and then, with what anguish of heart no words can tell, I wrote to Jack again—my fourth letter—begging him, imploring him, to answer me, if but to tell me he was weary of his promise and wished to be set free; and then, making a superhuman effort over myself, I waited, waited, month by month, for an answer, though I knew that it must be at least six months before one could come.

I had given up expecting one in the interim, and I was too proud to send to his relatives—distant ones, whom I had never seen, and who had probably never heard of me. The thought had taken root now and grown to a feeling of certainty, but I waited for my answer.

Three months—six months—nine months passed away, and hope was dead within my heart. They said I had grown much older and more careworn. Madame said I worked too hard, and the sharp business woman became quite motherly in her attentions to me. But I would not take any change, for work was like balm to me; it blunted my thoughts; and, knowing that I was daily growing pale and thin, I still waited.

I knew the girls used to whisper together about me and think me strange, but no one knew my secret—not even Madame, who had more than once sought my confidence; and so twelve months passed away—four years since Jack had left me.

It was not to a day, but very nearly to the time when he had parted from me, and it was almost two years since I had heard from him. I was trying hard to grow patient and contented with my lot, for Mme. Grainger had gradually taken to me, and trusted me, making me more and more her right hand, when one glorious spring morning, as I was coming out of the breakfast-room to go up-stairs to work, she called me into her little snuggery, where she sat as a rule and attended to her customers' letters, for she had an extensive clientele, and carried on business in a large private mansion in Welbeck street.

"Grace, my dear," she said, taking me in her arms and kissing me, "it worries me to see you look so ill. Now, what do you say to a fortnight in the country?"

A fortnight in the country! and at her busiest time, with the London season coming on.

I thought of that, and then, as I glanced round at the flowers and inhaled their scents, the bright fields near Templemore Grange floated before my dimming eyes, a feeling of suffocation came upon me, and the room seemed to swing round. I believe that for the first time in my life I should have fainted, so painful were the memories evoked by her words, when a sharp knock and ring at the door echoed through the house, following instantly upon the dull fall of a letter and the sharp click of the letter box.

It was like an electric shock to me, and without a word I darted into the hall, panting with the excitement and my hand at my throat to tear away the stifling sensation.

But it was a letter. I could see it through the glass in the letter-box, and I seized it with trembling hands, inspired, as it were, by some strange power.

"Jack! dear Jack at last!" I gasped as I turned it over and saw it was a strange, blue, official-looking letter, formally directed to me.

Even that did not surprise me. It was from Jack, I knew, and I tore open the blue envelope.

Yes, I knew it! The inner envelope was covered with Australian post-marks, and, ignorant as I might be with its contents, I was raising it to my lips to cover it with passionate kisses when I saw it was open.

Then a mist came over my mental vision for a moment, but only to clear away as, half stupefied, I turned the missive over and over, held it straight for a moment, and then, with a sigh of misery and despair, I stood mute and as if turned to stone.

"Grace, my child! In mercy's name tell me——"

It was Madame, who passed her arm round me and looked horror-stricken at my white face and lips. The next moment I dimly remember she had caught the letter—his letter—my letter—from my hand, and read it aloud: "Mr. John Braywood, Markboro, R. County Melbourne," and then, in her excitement, the great official sentence-like brand upon it, "Dead!"

That was the beginning of my first and only illness, during which Madame tended me like a mother, even to giving up her business afterwards, and retiring to live with me here in this quiet street, where she died, and left me well-to-do, as you see. I have grown old since then, but I am not unhappy, great as was the trial, and it has led me into what I hope has been a useful life. And, besides, why should I sorrow, knowing as I do that which came to me years and years after—that Jack died with my name upon his lips—died true to her he loved? and I am but waiting till we shall meet again.—Geo. Manville Fenn in Cassell's Magazine.

VIRGINIA CITY is proud of its athletes. Regnier, the French wrestler, went there, made a match for $500, and was easily thrown by a miner. Fred Bussey, a prize-fighter from Chicago, was whipped twice in bar-rooms while talking about a regular fight in a ring. John Paddock, a Boston pedestrian, was readily beaten in a walk of a hundred miles. The Chronicle says, also, that men should not come there expecting to win anything at poker.

THE French Chambers of Commerce are planning for a grand canal between Havre and Marseilles. One of the plans is for a ship canal ten feet deep, 100 feet wide, across the Isthmus of Guienne and Languedoc, shortening the sea route by 800 miles.

THIRTY-NINE PEOPLE DROWNED.

Terrible Fate of the Village of Rockdale, Iowa—The Town Swept Away by a Flood, and Every Inhabitant Drowned.

DUBUQUE, IOWA, July 6.—On the night of the Fourth the little hamlet of Rockdale, 3 miles southwest of the city was swept away as with the besom of destruction. Every building in the little town save the Catfish Mill was washed from its foundation and torn into a wreck that defies description. The dozen buildings—all that were located on the bottom lands of the Catfish save the mill—were carried off as if they were so many cockleshells, and whirled adown the surging and boiling current, crushing them into fragments.

Thirty-nine human beings were swept hurriedly from life into the great maelstrom of death. Men, women and children to that number, were drowned, and their stiff bodies—those of the thirty that have been rescued up to this hour—were ranged side by side along the shady side of the mill awaiting the last sad funeral rites. In one instance we saw an entire family of four all lying dead; in another every member of the family but one lay dead. The bodies of some were found in the debris of the crushed buildings near the scene of their death, while others, and the greater part of them all, were found along the banks from a few rods to a mile down the stream. Some were almost entirely hid from view by the floods of mud that had been swept along by the maddened waters, with perhaps a hand only exposed to sight, or a foot or a portion of the face, or perhaps only a small portion of their clothing. A large number of little children, boys and girls, ranging from 3 to 12 years old, were the victims of the dread avalanche, and altogether the scene was a most sickening one.

Through the day the people of the village had joined more or less in the festivities of the Centennial Fourth. In the evening the rain began to fall, and all took shelter in their homes or at the stores or saloons. At about half an hour after midnight the Catfish was discovered to have become so swollen that the streets were overflowing, and escape to the surrounding highlands cut off. Higher and higher rose the rushing waters, while the storm kept pitilessly on. Down rolled the surging water in great waves several feet high, and the smaller buildings were swept away. At about 1 o'clock a portion of the dam gave way. Now the stream had grown to 2,000 feet wide and fully twenty feet deep. As the buildings were swept into wrecks, the inmates were hurled into the surging torrent, their voices crying out for help amidst the roar of thunder and storm and crash, while lurid lightnings flashed every minute, lighting up the dreadful scene for an instant, and leaving it blacker than before.

THE DEAD.

Joseph Becker, Ellen, his wife, and two children; James Pearce, Emma, his wife, and two children; Peter Becker and five children, also his housekeeper and two children; Mrs. Carey and two children; John Klassen, wife, and five children; Peter Kapp, wife and four children; Mrs. Kingsley, Thomas Blenkiron, Oliver Blenkiron, William Bradbury, and Richard Burke—thirty-nine in all, of which thirty-two have been recovered.

Altogether, the scene was one to touch a heart of stone. Thousands of people have visited it during the day, and people are going and coming constantly. The neighbors, with kindly alacrity, opened their doors to such of the afflicted as remained, and afforded every comfort in their power. The bodies of the dead were washed by kind hands, and many of them taken into the dwellings near by. The members of the Board of Supervisors were early on the ground, working like Trojans to recover the dead and give care to the living.

LATER.

Thirty-one bodies of the drowned have been recovered. Further search will be continued until all are found. William Watters, William Coats, and the Board of County Supervisors, labored with untiring industry to aid the sufferers and to recover the dead.

KAISER WILHELM.

He Writes an Autograph Letter to the President.

Mr. Schlozer, the German Minister to the United States, on the 4th of July presented to President Grant an autograph letter of congratulation from the Emperor of Germany. Mr. Schlozer, in presenting the letter, stated that he was instructed by His Majesty to deliver upon the 4th day of July to the President, in person, an autograph letter of congratulation upon the occasion of the Centennial anniversary, and wished to add his personal good wishes for the United States. The President briefly replied, assuring him of his satisfaction in receiving this evidence of good feeling on the part of His Majesty; that his kind expressions for the United States were fully appreciated, and that the letter should be properly acknowledged. A translation of the letter is as follows:

William, by the Grace of God Emperor of Germany, King of Prussia, etc., To the President of the United States of America—GREAT AND GOOD FRIEND: It has been vouchsafed to you to celebrate the Centennial festival of the day upon which the great republic over which you preside entered the rank of independent nations. The purposes of its founders have, by a wise application of the teachings of the history of the foundation of nations, and with an insight into the distant future, been realized by a development without a parallel. To congratulate you and the American people upon this occasion affords me so much the greater pleasure, because since the treaty of friendship which my ancestor of glorious memory, King Frederic II., who now rests with God, concluded with the United States, undisturbed friendship has continually existed between Germany and America, and has been developed and strengthened by the ever-increasing importance of their mutual relations, and by an intercourse being more and more fruitful in every domain of commerce and science. That the welfare of the United States and the friendship of the two countries may continue to increase is my sincere desire and confident hope. Accept renewed assurance of my unqualified esteem.

BERLIN, June 9, 1876. WILLIAM.

The Biggest Bear Story.

The Reno (Nev.) Gazette repeats it thus: "I've fought 'em standin' and runnin', but the toughest citizen I ever lit into was a black 'un. He was sittin, in the chapparal eatin' manzantia berries, when my dog smelt him and went home. I sneaked up and began agravatin' him by shootin' at his ears and feet. I then took around him, and with three shot cut off his tail. Old Blacky heerd me shootin', and turnin' around see his tail layin' there. He picked it up and looked at the trademark, and I see in a minute that war was comin'. I lit out for a tree, with only two cartridges left and him a comin'. Well, to make a long story short, I shot twice, hittin' him both times, and he begun to git hot, so he took up the tree after me, I knocked him down three times before my gun broke. He started on the fourth trip, and I didn't know what to do till I thought of my derringer which shot a four-ounce ball. I drew her out, and tied a string to the trigger, and as old Blacky came up with his mouth wide open, I dropped her in. He hadn't time to spit her out, and so he swallowed and I pulled the string. Off went the gun and so help me, I never see anything of bear or pistol since."

FRIGHTFUL CALAMITY.

How Twenty-two Young Women were Burned to Death at Ayr, Scotland.

The Glasgow News give the following account of the recent burning of the mill at Ayr, Scotland, by which twenty-two young women perished:

"Within the third story of the second block of buildings from Fort street, the fatal spark was kindled. The operatives resumed work after breakfast as usual, and all went on smoothly till James Barr, a laborer in the worsted department, was alarmed by a "young lass" (as he describes her) exclaiming in a state of excitement that there was a fire in the room. The girl had been working at a wool-teaser, and soon it was perceived that the wool had taken fire, apparently from friction. Barr immediately called his neighbors who gathered in large numbers. Three extincteurs kept in the establishment for emergencies of this kind were produced, and an effort made to subdue the flames, but without effect. No sooner was water poured on one corner than the fire spread to another, defying the utmost efforts of all present to keep it within bounds. Some one at an early period called for a sheet with which to "smother" the fire; but with such alarming rapidity did it spread that any attempt in that direction would have been useless or worse than useless. In a few minutes those who had gathered round the spot where the fire originated were compelled to flee for their lives, leaving portions of their clothing and all they possessed in the mill behind. So far all was right, in respect that no damage resulted to life, but the sequel of the event which had just been inaugurated was disastrous and appalling. In the garret overhead of the room described, James Barr aged 50 years, and father of the man named above, was working with 25 young women under his charge, and there the great loss of life took place, James Barr, it is alleged, on hearing the screams in the flat beneath, and on being informed that there was a fire, made an endeavor to keep the cries of those who were apparently terror-stricken beneath from penetrating his own department and causing greater consternation than was necessary. He then ran downstairs, saw the imminent danger of the whole establishment, rushed up again and gave the alarm, but was too late to effect an escape for himself or others as the staircases were all "ablaze," and the smoke and fire were such as no one could pass through and live. A scene more easily imagined that described followed. The young women rushed to the windows and called for that aid which could not be afforded them. They gesticulated and screamed and sobbed in the presence of death, and implored those outside to save their lives. Meanwhile the fire spread rapidly, the buildings one by one were enveloped, the flames shot high in the air, and before long the spot where the helpless females had been vainly seeking for succor was reduced to ruins, and those who occupied it were lost beyond hope of recall. Several most painful incidents are reported in connection with this event. The old man Barr was, before the fire obliterated everything, seen at one of the windows waving his hands apparently calling for rescue, and a large number of the girls were holding by him in the last lingering hope of having their lives spared. One young woman, named Catherine McKinnon, jumped from the height of four stories and fell heavily on the ground beneath. She was taken up insensible, placed on a mattress, and removed to the Ayr Hospital. She was alive when the hospital was reached, but expired in a few minutes. The poor girl, who was 16 years of age, fell on her forehead. Her skull was fractured, her arm broken, and other injuries sustained, so that all the skill which could be brought to bear could not save her life. Another young girl, named Simpson, residing in High street, came to a window screaming. Her sister, who happened to be beneath at the moment, called out, "Jump out, or you'll be killed," and the little girl instantly leaped over. The sister endeavored to catch her, but as the height from which the leap was taken was very great both came into violent contact and were thrown down. The sister escaped unhurt, a fact which is marvelous, but the young girl was a good deal bruised, it is feared seriously so. Her hair was burned with the flame, which just before her leap was devouring all before it. Those who had found an exit from the works now made the best of their good fortune and ran from danger, while the unfortunate persons left behind were at the mercy of the devouring element. Mothers appeared on the scene in terror, asking for their daughters; brothers and sisters looked everywhere for their relatives, who, alas! could not be saved. It was impossible to say who were and who were not among the unfortunate victims till well on in the evening, when the fire had been subdued. Hoping against hope, parents expected that their children might return at the usual hour, and waited with eager anxiety their appearance."

Paid in His Own Coin.

A few evenings since a young couple called upon a clergyman at Oneida, Wis., and stated that they wished to be united in the holy bonds of matrimony. Before the ceremony commenced the young lady excused herself from the room, saying that she would return in a few moments. She handed the minister a note which he read soon after her departure. It was as follows: "Arthur—"You will wait for me in vain, for the longer you wait the further away I'll be. I shan't marry you to-night. You went back on me a year ago, and I'll get even with you now." The bridegroom took the hint, bade the clergyman good-by, and started for home.

SELKIRK'S Island, with the adjoining Santa Clara and Mass Fuera, are rented by the Chilian Government to a speculator from Valparaiso, who uses them for stock raising and sealing. Large quantities of fur seals are taken on the islands every season. The soil is extremely fertile, quinces and peaches grow wild, and the higher parts of the islands are covered thickly with very valuable timber.

NEWSPAPER TITLES.

An Interesting Chapter on Journalistic Nomenclature.

[From the Centennial Newspaper Exhibition.]

The publication's of all kinds described in the "American Newspaper Directory" for 1876 are represented by 7,626 titles. In many cases several editions are issued from the same establishment, under substantially the same name, and in the figures just stated such several editions are counted as but one. The Journals are the most numerous, there being 487. Next in favor stand the Times. These number 310. There are 302 Heralds. The News number 298. The total of the Gazettes is 276. The Democrats come next in point of numbers, 268. To offset the Democratic phalanx there are 211 Republicans. The Advertisers number 92, and are naturally most frequent in localities where the populace is the most enlightened and progressive. There are 122 Advocates. This name appears to be a favorite of the religious publications, and at least three-fifths of the total are borne by religious papers. There are 60 papers known as the Argus, and with this quantity of professed eye-power, it is amazing that the frauds heretofore existing for years were not sooner discovered. There are 58 Bulletins, which are undoubtedly perused with care by the 51 Citizens described in the "Directory." Of Chronicles there are 89, while 143 Couriers stand in expectancy, ready to depart with 34 Dispatches. There are 89 Enterprises, most of them being located in the West. There are 45 Expresses, 34 Farmers, and 20 Globes. One of the latter is the Flint Globe of Michigan, and another the Golden Globe of Colorado Territory. Just 133 papers keep on the safe side by being Independents, though 49 Leaders are ready to direct them. There are 34 Ledgers, 47 Observers, and 16 Pilots. One of the latter is the Storm Lake Pilot of Iowa, and another the Lone Rock Pilot of Wisconsin. Each of these is remarkably coincident in respect to the name of the place and the name of the paper. There are 59 Posts, 122 Registers, and 95 Reviews. The country enjoys the guardianship of 144 Sentinels, one of which is the Lone Tree Sentinel of Iowa. There are 76 Standards, 84 Stars, 50 Suns, and 93 Tribunes. Among the unusual or striking titles are the Bistoury (Elmira, N. Y.), Jimplecute (Jefferson, Tex.), Luzapililan (Fayette C. H., Ala.), the Card Basket—a society paper—of Washington, the Hope Star of Hope (Ark.), Thistleton's Illustrated Jolly Giant (San Francisco), China Mail and Flying Dragon, the Elm Leaf (East Hartford, Conn.), the Eulenspiegel (Owl's Mirror) of Chicago, Jefferson Republican, the Southern Cross—a Catholic paper—of Savannah, the Egyptian Press (Marion, Ill.), Hoosier Patron and Lady Granger (Indianapolis), Hoosier State, Union Spy—there is only one, Condenser, Meschacebe, Wide Awake—a literary paper, Iron Home (Ishpeming, Mich.), Morgan's Watch-tower (Mt. Pleasant, Mich.), the Ricochet (Oxford, Miss.), Blætter und Kladderadatsch, the Schnedderdengg, Freedman's Monitor and Workingman's Looking Glass (Philadelphia), the I. C. B. U. Journal (also in Philadelphia), the Four Counties of Richmond, Texas, the Ventilator and Golden Rule (Mannington, W. Va.), Eurhetorian Argosy (Sackville, Ont.), Stylus, Lady Elgin (Elgin, Ill.), Over the Country, Pajaronian, Aurora Brazileira, Neighbor's Home Mail, Psyche, Madisonensis, and the Alpine Chronicle of Silver Mountain, Cal. To these may be added the Toledo Blade, Burlington Hawk-Eye, Cape May Ocean Wave, Broad Ax of Freedom, Sentinel on the Border, Unterrified Democrat, Spirit Lake Beacon, Homer's Iliad, Horschead's Journal, Painted Post Times, Roman Citizen, and many others. Names popularly supposed to be frequent are in fact rare. It occasionally happens that the prominence attained by a single paper with a certain name brings the name so much before the people that it grows familiar to the public mind, though there may really be but few papers with the same designation. What the journalistic fancy of the Centennial year will devise in the way of newspaper titles is uncertain.

Responsibility for the Little Horn Massacre.

Gen. Terry, in his official report of the battle that resulted so disastrously to Gen. Custer and his brave comrades, attributes the blame for the disaster to Custer's rash gallantry, and his failure to carry out his part of the plan of operations. Gen. Terry says in his report:

While at the mouth of the Rosebud I submitted my plan to Gen. Gibbon and to Gen. Custer. They approved it heartily. It was that Custer with his whole regiment should move up the Rosebud till he should meet a trail which Reno had discovered a few days before, but that he should not follow it directly to the Little Big Horn, but that he should send scouts over it and keep his main force further to the south so as to prevent the Indians from slipping in between himself and the mountains. He was also to examine the head waters of Tullocka creek as he passed it and send me word of what he found there. A scout was furnished him for the purpose of crossing the country to me. We calculated it would take Gibbon's column until the 26th to reach the mouth of the Little Big Horn, and that the wide swoop which I had proposed Custer should make would require so much time that Gibbon would be able to co-operate with him in attacking any Indians that might be found on the stream. I asked Custer how long his marches would be. He said they would be at first about thirty miles a day. Measurements were made and calculations based on that rate of progress. I talked with him about his strength and at one time suggested that perhaps it would be better for me to take Gibbon's cavalry and go with him. To this suggestion he replied that he would prefer his own regiment alone as as much could be done with it as with two combined. He expressed the utmost confidence that he had all the force that he could need and I shared his confidence.

The plan adopted was the only one which promised to bring the infantry into action, and I desired to make sure of things by getting up every available man. I offered Custer the battery of Gattling guns, but he declined it, saying that it might embarrass him and that he was strong enough without it. The movements proposed by Gen. Gibbon's column were carried out to the letter, and had the attack been deferred until it came up I cannot doubt that we should have been successful. The Indians had ev

Dated, Ann Arbor, July 10, 1876.

THE Democracy of Detroit had a glorious ratification meeting last evening.

EX-SPEAKER BLAINE will bully the House no more. He is now called Mr. Senator.

JUDGE DAVIS has been the victim of a Republican slander. He doesn't support Hayes and Wheeler.

THE New York World speaks of Carl Schurz as "that stem-winding politician." Expressive, very.

THE main reliance of the Republicans: the sword and the purse. The sword to be used in the South, the purse to be emptied out over the North.

BRICK POMEROY refuses to support Samuel J. Tilden for President: and we record his refusal with the greatest pleasure. It is evidence that Tilden is just the man.

COLORADO having adopted a constitution will be formally admitted as a State prior to, and in time to vote at, the November election. The vote in the Electoral College will therefore be 368, with 185 necessary to a choice.

WAS Postmaster-General Jewell removed (we forget, he resigned by request) for a refusal to despatch special agents to canvass Indiana and Ohio,—doing meantime no work but that of signing the pay-roll and drawing their little allowance?

BRISTOW shelters himself under his "privilege" and refuses to disclose "Cabinet secrets" involving the prosecution of the Whisky Ring suits. Perhaps the ex-Secretary takes a position legally correct, nevertheless the fact that there are "secrets" which will not bear disclosing is as damaging as would be a frank statement of the Cabinet intrigues to save Babcock, McKee, and others.

"UNITED we stand, divided we fall:" that is the maxim Gen. Terry forgot when he divided his forces and sent Custer up the Rosebud and across to the Little Big Horn, in pursuit of Sitting Bull and his warriors. And Custer seems to have forgotten the same maxim when he divided his regiment; but for which latter division Maj. Reno and his seven companies of his command may have reason to be thankful.

ZACHARIAH CHANDLER has been elected Chairman of the Bepublican National Committee, which is'nt exactly satisfactory to the "original" Hayes men. A campaign under Zack Chandler, made on the funds and at the expense of the Interior Department, doesn't smack of party purity or administrative reform. "Mizzer" Chandler is'nt exactly a model reformer, "you know."

PRESIDENT GRANT is evidently a believer in that scripture which says "He that provideth not for his own household is worse than an infidel:" and so he has appointed his son Fred to be First Lieutenant in the Fourth Cavalry, while older and better officers look for promotion in vain. It is not understood that the Fourth Cavalry is on duty in Montana, or if it is that Lieut. Fred will be ordered to join his regiment.

GOV. HAYES places himself on record in favor of a constitutional amendment, which, disguised as a bull against sectarian public schools, is designed to give Congress control of the educational systems and institutions of the States. It is fortunate that Grant will be out of office before such an amendment can be adopted: as we may escape the school or educational administration of a Boss Shepherd, a Tom Murphy, a Parson Newman, a Davenport, or some other willing partisan tool.

GOV. HAYES says in his letter of acceptance, "The resolutions are in accordance with my views, and I heartily concur in the principles they announce:" this without reservation or explanation. The seventeenth resolution thus heartily and fully indorsed reads:

17. The National Administration merits commendation for its honorable work in the management of domestic and foreign affairs, and President Grant deserves the hearty gratitude of the American people for his patriotism and his immense services in war and in peace.

Mr. Hayes is therefore an indorser of Grant and Grantism, and Grant and Grantism will be perpetuated in his administration if elected. And what is the outlook for reform in that direction?

IT HAS BEEN surmised or suggested that the origin of the popular ballad of "Yankee Doodle" may be traced to this old and simple stanza:

"Lucy Locket lost her pocket,
Kitty Fisher found it;
Nothing in it, nothing in it,
But the binding round it."

And that pocket book which Lucy lost and Kitty found, with "nothing in it, nothing in it," was evidently the model of the letter of acceptance of Gov. Hayes. It is as spiritless and mild-mannered a paper as could well be imagined, the product of a warm day, with a desire to avoid both the labor of thought and expression. Its virtues, like those of its author, are of the negative kind, and its omissions more remarkable than its expressions of opinion. It rides two or three of the inoffensive hobbies of the platform, and in addition the rider mounts one of his own,—the "one term" nag, a greater humbug than even "civil service reform," as construed by the Administration. After completing the document and attaching his signature, Gov. Hayes no doubt felt as did Bro. Beecher, "about so so, dear Elizabeth."

THAT SPICY Washington correspondent, Mary Clemmer Ames, writes to the Cincinnati Commercial expressing her sorrow that Mrs. Hayes is a Methodist, not because of any antipathy to Methodists or Methodism, but solely for the reason that if her husband shall be elected President "that fact will be likely to impose upon this community for another four years or more the Rev. Mr. Newman, ostensibly of the Methodist Metropolitan Church—but who has been retained here, I don't know how many years, as a sort of Congressional and Court Chaplain." And then she proceeds to pronounce Parson Newman a "fraud," a "politician," a "bummer," a "voluptuary," a "pretender," an "egotist," a "hypocrite," and other pet names. Concluding, she says:

"He is not a scholar; he is not a thinker. He is a fat, weeping prophet, who tells anecdotes and cries over them, and can make broad genre pictures of what he has seen. Superficial people take this for wonderful talent, and even Gen. Grant said: 'I never hear Dr. Newman but he gives me a new idea.' It was Schuyler Colfax who told this, and the lady to whom he repeated it replied: 'I knew that Gen. Grant was not overburdened with ideas of an intellectual kind, but I never imagined him so poor as that'"

MR. F. HASSAUREK, one of the leading Germans of Cincinnati, and formerly a Republican, addressed a Democratic ratification meeting on Saturday evening last,—making a candid and able speech, fully indorsing the St. Louis platform and Tilden. Confessing a dislike to one clause in the platform, that demanding a repeal of the Resumption act of 1875, he insists, nevertheless, that "even with this clause it is better, clearer, and more decided for a return to sound money than the platform adopted at Cincinnati." The tariff plank he especially commends, as he does Samuel J. Tilden, and in words which will carry conviction to his fellow citizens who heard or read them. Concluding, he said: "I do not control any political element but what you see before you under this coat. I carry no man's vote in my pocket but my own. But that individual vote shall be cast in undying opposition to the paternal and interference theory of government, and consequently at the approaching election it shall be cast for individual liberty, unfettered industry, unshackled commerce, free trade, hard money, and Samuel J. Tilden." Peculiar significance attaches to this speech because the Volksblatt, of which Mr. Hassaurek was editor, supports Hayes and Wheeler. This support is attributed to the fact that the newspaper partner of Mr. Hassaurek is also the law partner of Mr. Hayes. Without Hassaurek the influence of the Volksblatt will count for little.

"We should return to the principles and practices of the founders of the government, supplying by legislation, where needed, that which was formerly the established custom. They neither expected nor desired any partisan service. They meant that public officers should owe their whole services to the government and to the people."

Such is the language of Gov. Hayes in his letter accepting the Republican nomination for President. The letter was dated June 8. And on the same 8th day of June Secretary Chandler was made chairman of the National Republican Committee, and is expected to devote the next four months almost exclusively to "partisan service,"—and of course will not be expected to deduct from his salary for "lost time." The letter of Gov. Hayes was given to the public on the 10th day of June, and on the same 10th day of June Postmaster General Jewell was asked to resign, that his vacant place in the Cabinet might be given to a more wily politician, a man who is expected to do better "partisan service" in Indiana and Ohio than the aforesaid Postmaster-General Jewell. The president and his political advtisers either "read between the lines" of Gov. Hayes' letter, or they don't care what he says or means. We don't care much which and the reader can "choose his choice."

THE SCALP of Gen. Custer dangles at the belt of Sitting Bull, but the President goes him better and ornaments his wigwam with the scalps of Bristow, Jewell, Pratt, Dyer, Yaryan,—the first voluntarily (?) surrendered, the next two given him "by request," and the last two removed—after the Sitting Bull fashion. And still he is not satisfied.

OUR Republican friends are jubilant over the support Carl Schurz promises to give their ticket, and his decision is attributed to his dissatisfaction with the financial plank of the St. Louis platform and the nomination of Hendricks for Vice-President. Now to definitely settle the question that "pure cussedness" and not the action of the St. Louis Convention underlies the decision of Schurz, we quote the explicit declaration of the Lansing Republican that "he [Schurz] informed a Michigan delegate at Cincinnati that he should probably take the stump for Hayes and Wheeler."

THE Connecticut delegation in the Cincinnati Convention had the impudence to vote for Jewell for President on the first ballot, and after that refused to vote for Grantism—Conkling, or even for Morton. And now Jewell is no longer Postmaster-General, and Grant, Conkling, and Morton are each and all revenged. Boss Shepherd also rejoices that the "bob-tailed clam Yankee" has come to grief.

THE committee appointed by the St. Louis Convention to notify the candidates of their nomination, waited upon Gov. Tilden, on Tuesday, at his residence in New York, and discharged the duty, both by oral addresses and in a written communication. Gov. Tilden responded briefly, appropriately, in a becoming manner, and in no doubtful language, and also promised a written reply at an early day.

ON Monday, by request of the President, Postmaster-General Jewell tendered his resignation, and on Tuesday the President nominated as his successor Judge Tyner, Second Assistant Postmaster-General. The change is not in the interest of civil service reform, but exclusively for political purposes.

AND JEWELL too will "never, never tell" what Cabinet officers said to him touching the removal or forced resignation of clerks in his department, and also why he removed them. "The truth is not to be told at all times."

To the Democrats of Michigan.

The National Convention of St. Louis, having ratified the first choice of the people in nominating men of pronounced characteristic, who have a record as reformers in the interest of the taxpayers of the country, and in the interest of public morality, the undersigned, as chairman of the Democratic State Committee, desires respectfully to call your attention to the principles enunciated in the platform adopted by the State Convention held at Lansing on the 24th of May last, and particularly to the recommendation in the 9th resolution there adopted, as follows:

"We recommend to all local Democratic Conventions to place in nomination such men only as are known to be honest, capable and efficient, men who have the confidence of the community, and who if elected will strive to lessen the burden of taxation on the people."

The condition of the country is such that the treatment of political questions this year assumes the form of a business transaction. It is an absolute necessity that the burden of taxation upon the people should be lightened, and to that end that there should be a change in the administration. That this change may be effected, such men only should be placed in nomination as have the entire confidence of the people as business men; men of good judgment and sterling integrity.

Patriotism has its duties and opportunities for display in time of peace as well as in times of war, and no good citizen will refuse to serve the people in any capacity to which they may call him when the times are such as to justify the call. We urge you, therefore, to discard all personal aspirations, and in selecting your candidates for the National, State and local offices, select them purely from the consideration suggested in the resolution above referred to and in the interest of honest government and lightened taxes.

If our State and local tickets correspond with these principles as well as does the National ticket, we may rest assured that success will follow our efforts.

The best influences and the highest motives have completely controlled in our conventions, and our National and State platforms are so broad and so fresh that every honest man who desires the best good of the whole country can cordially co-operate with us.

We feel assured that good men everywhere, convinced of the absolute and immediate necessity for a radical change in the management of public affairs, are eliminating from their minds those prejudices which are the growth of partisan strife over differences the causes of which no longer exist; and are sinking the technicalities of party distinctions in responding to the utter need of the hour in the high character of American citizens.

And in our discussions with such men, of our friends and neighbors who have heretofore acted with any other political party, let us not obscure the real questions of the hour by recalling past controversies, but rather let us meet them on such broad ground that all may stand upon it, and show to them by our deeds as well as our words the living, active sincerity of our professions. That our aspirations are not for the success of the party merely, but above party and above all personal and selfish considerations, are for the redemption of the country from bad rule, and for our vindication, not as Democrats, but as citizens of the Republic, upon whom, as the governing power, can be cast just reproach if the year shall pass and every monument of the miserable record of the past four years be not overthrown and cast out, and the seats of government cleansed of every sign and indication of the possible return of bad men.

DON M. DICKINSON, Chairman.

Political Clippings.

The one thing that the election of a Democratic president would insure would be peace at the South. By peace we mean entire obliteration of sectionalism, the assurance to that people that they are a part and parcel of the Union in more than name; that they can pursue plans and develop means leading to a permanent prosperity without the dread of a South Carolina government being installed to waste the fruits of industry and honesty.—The Capital.

The Democracy have several very signal advantages in the present Presidential campaign. They are so numerous and so powerful that the certainty of that party to elect their national ticket is assured. This assurance, however is coupled with the conditions that there be no blundering, no mismanagement. As the leader of the Democratic hosts is a captain of supreme ability, it is certain that, if there be mismanagement, it will be among subordinates. Nevertheless, such is the temper of the people that it is only some supreme folly which can throw away an overwhelming victory.—Chicago Times (Ind.)

The past history of the country shows that the people have never failed to overthrow the evil outgrowth of the war, and to drive from power those who have shamelessly abused their trust.—Albany Argus.

With Samuel J. Tilden as President there will be no Belknaps or Delanos in the Cabinet. Schencks will not degrade nor dishonor us abroad; Boss Shepherds will not rule us at home. There will be no whisky rings in the west; the infamous rule of the carpet-baggers will come to an end in the South; we shall have no Tom Murphys in the North, and no Butlerism in the East.—Wheeling (Va.) Register.

The nomination of Samuel J. Tilden is the weakest that could have been made for Ohio and the strongest for the whole country. It is idle to deny that the naming of Mr. Tilden as the Democratic standard-bearer sounds to an Allen-Democrat like an invitation to march under a new banner and to new watchwords. But we are a nation of diversified interests, and the admirable party platform constructed for and adapted to every state in the Union, could have placed upon it no fitter exponent than the great reform Governor of New York.—Toledo Democrat (Allen.)

Governor Hendricks has never—though sorely pressed to do so—uttered a word inconsistent with his fidelity to the time-honored Democratic doctrine of gold and silver as the only true currency basis. Governor Hendrick's views as to the conditions and methods necessary to resumption differ from those of most Eastern Democrats, but that he desires a perpetuation of the disordered finances and depreciated irredeemable paper fastened upon the country by Republican legislation and maladministration, is as far from the truth as can be.—Buffalo Courier (Dem).

The people of this State have determined to have a peaceable canvass. The negro population will be protected in voting for whom it pleases. The colored conservative voter seems to be needing protection just at this time. the North may preserve its equanimity. There will be no organized violence here, for those who have a right to speak for the State will not favor nor permit.—New Orleans Times (Dem.)

Gov. Tilden was elected to his present office by 50,000 majority over Gov. John A. Dix, a decisive test of personal popularity. After Mr. Bristow, he is the only man in high place who has risked anything in a fight with corruptionists. The Tweed and Canal Rings of this State have attracted about as much attention as the Whisky Ring. Mr. Bristow has resigned, and President Grant is pardoning the men whose conviction Bristow secured. Gov. Tilden, more fortunate than Bristow, has his foot on both the New York Rings, and was able to triumph over them at St. Louis.—The Methodist.

It is a rather a too careless charge which is brought against the Democrats by their opponents that in nominating Tilden they surrender Ohio and the Western States to the Republicans. Why? If it is because Tilden's Hard-Money principles do not suit those States, then the Republicans, in claiming them so readily, confess that they expect to carry them on soft-money grounds. That is equivalent to a plain declaration on their part that it is as a soft-money party that they claim Ohio and other Western States. Their financial plank is all punk-wood, inserted to make a hard sound under the feet of the East and a soft one under those of the West—Boston Post (Dem).

After denouncing Grant and Grantism for years in the strongest English and German, Carlz Schurz now indorses a platform which declares Grant and his administration "deserving of the continued and hearty gratitude of the American people." In other and plainer words, he is eating penitential dirt at the feet of the very men who have abused him. This may be shrewd political strategy on the part of Mr. Schurz, but there are some persons who will not hesitate to call it demagoguery of the lowest kind. Had he been what all his friends claim for him, or even half what his enemies have been willing to concede him, he would have refused to thus stultify himself in order to get back into the party out of which he was so vigorously kicked only a little while ago. If he could not support Tilden and Hendricks, he need not put on the Zebra uniform of Hayes and Wheeler. A dignified neutrality would have saved his character and preserved his influence. As matters now stand he has materially damaged the one and very materially weakened the other. We presume that Mr. Schurz thinks he carries the liberal Republican German vote in his pocket, and we predict he will find himself mistaken in supposing that his countrymen can change their principles as easily as he has done.—St. Louis Republican.

July 14, 1876.

LOCAL AFFAIRS.

—Prof. Olney discussed "The Country ...ool Problem" before the National Associ...n at Baltimore on Tuesday.

—"Old Probabilities" went back on the ...ion on Monday, and haying was again in...ed with by heavy rains.

—Henry S. Harris, a graduate of the Uni...ity, class of '76, is to join the Detroit Post ...orial staff on the 18th inst.

—R. H. Clark, of the Grand Rapids Demo...at, spent a day or two in this city last week. ...We were out when he called.

—Assistant Professor Alfred Hennequin, of ...Cornell University, arrived home a few days ago ...from his year's stay and study in Europe.

—Up to date Mack & Schmid have bought ...[illegible] lbs. of wool, and Bach & Abel, 80,000 ...lbs. Prices now paying from 23 to 25 cents.

—At a recent meeting of Company A a reso...tion was adopted thanking those citizens ...who so generously contributed to the drum ...and equipment fund.

—Leonard House "Joe." fell down in a fit ...while crossing the Court House Square on ...Friday afternoon. He soon recovered and ...was taken home in a hack.

—Lewis Sutton, living near Whitlark's Mill, ...had a severe sun-stroke on Saturday last, but ...on Sunday morning his medical attendant, Dr. ...Kirk of this city pronounced him out of dan...ger.

—That flag staff on Firemen's Hall is ...endangered for one forty feet long, which is ...to be put up on the tower of the same building. ...If the glorious flag will float on a "high(er) ...mission."

—Rose M. Boylan, who has resided in this ...city 45 years and was well-known to all the ...old inhabitants, but who has been retired ...from business for several years because of age ...and infirmity, died on Tuesday afternoon, ...aged 71 years.

—A very brilliant meteor was observed in ...this city about 8 o'clock Saturday evening last, ...traversing across the southwestern sky like a ...ball of lightning, exploding with a hissing ...sound and leaving a trail of light visible for ...half an hour or more.

—Because a number of butchers were con...victed and fined on Saturday last for a viola...tion of the city ordinance prohibiting slaughter...ing within the forbidden limits, a league ...was formed and all the shops but one closed at ...five o'clock Monday. But Tuesday evening a ...special Common Council meeting was held, a compro...mise effected, and the markets were open on ...Wednesday. See council proceedings for ...particulars.

—An accidental omission of the name of R. ...R. Fenner, Esq., from the list of speakers at ...the Democratic ratification meeting in this ...city, gave the Register a chance to enliven its ...usually dull and heavy columns with a "joak." ...We should almost be tempted to make mis...takes on purpose"—just to witness the bril...liant scintillations of genius which will shoot ...forth out from the headquarters of the "star ...combination troupe."

—That committee appointed to investigate ...the city finances and discover the cause of the ...discrepancy between the books of the Record...er and Treasurer will find an explanation easy. ...The Recorder charges the several funds with ...the amount drawn; the Treasurer credits himself ...with the amounts the several funds with the orders ...are given. Old orders still remain on the Re...corder's books (uncalled for), while others have ...been delivered which have not been presented ...and paid. And so the two sets of books do ...not show the same balances.

—The attention of "Centennial" travelers is ...invited to the advertisement of the Northern ...Central Railway in another column. The ...connections by this route are close and the ...time shorter than by any other—being but 27 ...hours from Detroit. The scenery along the ...route is as fine as any in the Eastern States, ...so that tourists will find attractive "stop over ...tickets," enabling them to shorten their rides ...and drink in their fill of nature by the way,—...as at Susquehanna Bridge, Watkin's Glen, in ...the Susquehanna Valley, at Williamsport, and ...at other points in Pennsylvania. Excursion ...tickets may be obtained of G. W. Sharpless ...at the depot, with sleeping car berths, etc.

Church Brevities.

—Rev. C. A. Clark, late of Brooklyn, N. ...Y., has accepted a call to the Baptist Church ...in Dexter.

—The Baptists of Manchester are talking ...of an after-harvest excursion to Put-in-Bay. ...A good bay to put into.

—The fourth quarterly meeting of the M. ...E. Church, for the present conference year, ...will be held on Sunday next, Presiding Elder ...Fee officiating.

—The pastor and "official brethren" of the ...A. E. Church made an unusual "departure" ...last Sunday: succumbed to the weather and ...dispensed with the regular evening service. ...A wise decision.

—The Young Ladies' Society of the Con...gregational Church are arranging for a rail...road and steamboat excursion, to take place ...about the first of August, for the benefit of ...their Organ fund.

—Rev. B. Parsons, for four years pastor of ...the Presbyterian Church at Saline, has given ...notice of his intention to close his labors with ...that church on the first of August. The ...leading causes are: a search both after health ...and enlarged educational facilities for his ...family.

—The next session of the Ann Arbor District ...Conference (Methodist Episcopal) is to be held ...at Ypsilanti, commencing on Tuesday evening, ...August 15, and closing Wednesday evening, ...August 16. The exercises will include exami...nation of candidates for the ministry, reports ...upon specific topics, discussions, etc.

Special Dispatch to the Detroit Tribune.

ANN ARBOR, July 7.—A Hayes & Wheeler ...club was organized in this city to-night, with a ...large attendance. The following officers were ...elected: President, N. W. Cheever; Vice ...President, Fred. Sorg; Secretary, E. K. Frue...auff; Treasurer, Wm. A. Lovejoy. Meetings ...are to be held every alternate Wednesday eve...ning. Considerable enthusiasm was shown to...night.

An observer counted 37 persons present at ...the "tallest stage"—6 being boys and several ...Democrats. But about 15 names were ...enrolled before proceeding to elect officers, and ...42 votes were polled, followed by charges ...of miscounting, ballot-box stuffing, &c. And ...this is called "enthusiasm."

Doings of the Common Council.

The regular monthly meeting of the Council was held on Monday evening, Ald. King, Kyer and Rogers were not present.

PETITIONS.

Of David Pickett, for the filling up of the Hooper spring, in front of his residence, on North State street. Referred to Street Committee.

Of Geo. Clarken and others, for erection of street lamp on corner of Ann and Second sts. To General Fund Committee.

REPORTS.

Bills against the various funds of the city were read by the Recorder, which were allowed and warrants ordered drawn for their amounts. The following are the amounts: General fund, $535.17; General Street, $1,183.99; First ward, $225.47; Second ward, $148.43; Third ward, $55.57; Fourth ward, $348.13; Fifth ward, $62.20; Sixth ward, $252.88; City Cemetery, $20.00; Contingent, $311 71—total, $3,143.55.

The Sidewalk Committee reported favorably on the petitions for sidewalk on east side of Thayer street between North University Ave. and Washington street, and on south side of North street between Division and Detroit streets. Accepted and adopted.

The Street Committee, to whom was referred the matter of obstruction of High street, reported that they find said street obstructed by a house, on the northwest corner of Main and High streets, the house projecting into the street twenty-five feet. Accepted, and on motion the owner was ordered to remove such obstruction within ten days, and if this be not done, that the Marshal be directed to take charge of such removal.

The Police Committee reported in relation to the charges preferred against the City Marshal at the last meeting. They had received the reply of the Marshal, and after a careful consideration of it, had come to the conclusion that the accused had not fairly met the charges, and that while his intentions may have been good he had evidently lacked judgment, but at his earnest request, and because he had promised to exercise more care in the performance of his duties hereafter, they recommend that his explanation be received and placed on file, leaving further action in the hands of the Council. Accepted and placed on file.

The late committee to settle with ex-Treasurer Rogers, reported that since their report on settlement warrants to the amount of $515 had been found, the same having been cashed and no account made thereof, and recommended that the amount be returned to him. Accepted and adopted.

The Marshal reported relative to relief furnished to the city poor during the month of June: No. of families relieved, 34, of which six are new applicants; amount of relief furnished, $129.33, divided among the several wards as follows: First ward, $16 51; Second ward, $24.49; Third ward, $11.88; Fourth ward, $45.64; Fifth ward, $2.13; Sixth ward, $13.68.

MISCELLANEOUS.

On motion, the General Fund Committee were directed to ascertain expense of erection of a music stand in the Court House Square, and to obtain permission for such erection, and if by them deemed expedient to cause the same to be constructed. Freeman's Cornet Band having offered to give weekly concerts thereat it such stand was erected.

On motion, Ald. Gardner was appointed a committee to cause the placing of a forty-foot flag staff upon the top of the bell tower of the Firemen's Hall.

Ald. Besimer offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That Mayor Kinne, Recorder Kintner, and Ald. Cate, be and are hereby appointed a committee to examine into the financial condition of the city, and to ascertain wherein exists the discrepancy between the City Recorder's and the City Treasurer's books, and the cause of such discrepancy; to settle with the late City Recorder for the terms during which he held that office; also with the City Marshal, and also to examine relative to fine moneys received and the amount paid over to City Treasurer by the Justices of the Peace of this city during the past year; and that such committee be authorized to procure the assistance of a competent accountant for that purpose at a reasonable compensation.

Ald. Doty presented a preamble and resolution in favor of a rigid enforcement of the ordinance relative to saloons, victualing houses, etc. By general consent the matter was laid over till next meeting.

Adjourned.

SPECIAL MEETING.

The Council was convened in special session on Tuesday evening, Ald. King and Rogers not being present. The Mayor stated that the object of the meeting was to consider propositions made by several butchers of the city relative to slaughter-houses. The Mayor then read the following propositions:

To the Honorable, the Common Council of the city of Ann Arbor:

Your petitioners would respectfully represent that they are engaged in the butcher business in the city of Ann Arbor, and are very desirous of obeying the ordinance relative to slaughter houses, but that it is impossible to remove all the tools and implements of the business, and erect suitable buildings for slaughtering, and at the same time attend to their shops, without being allowed a few days time for that purpose within the city. Your petitioners would therefore request that two weeks be allowed them for the purpose of building and removing their tools and implements as above mentioned, and if such permission is granted and they are allowed to butcher unmolested during that time, your petioners hereby promise to remove their slaughtering and do it continuously, and entirely, hereafter, outside of the city limits.

Signed by Henry Matthews, Wesley Canfield and H. T. Matthews.

The above proposition was unanimously accepted.

We, the undersigned, butchers of the city of Ann Arbor, do hereby make the following proposition to the Mayor, Recorder, and Aldermen of the city of Ann Arbor.

WHEREAS, We, the undersigned, have been arrested under an ordinance of said city, "An Ordinance relative to slaughter-houses," and desiring to avoid a multiplicity of suits, do hereby propose to said city to erect a temporary slaughter-house in some place not prohibited by said ordinance on or before the 8th day of August next, and do our slaughtering after that time in said temporary slaughter-house until the question of the validity of said ordinance may be settled. But, nevertheless, these proposals are to be adhered to only in case the city aforesaid shall discontinue the suits now pending against said butchers in Justice Court, and shall not commence any new suits under said ordinance, against the undersigned, until after the said 8th day of August, provided said proposal shall not interfere with any prosecutions against said parties for nuisances in fact. Dated, July 11, 1876.

Signed by G. F. Gwinner, Michael Weinmann, Xaver Zachmann, Henry Matthews, Jacob U. Binder, John G. Gall, Jacob Laubengayer.

The above proposition was accepted with but one dissenting vote, that of Ald. Page.

RESOLUTIONS OF COMPANY A.—WHEREAS Co. A, during its recent visit to Adrian, was welcomed and entertained by the citizens of Adrian, and especially by Company B, in a manner which has endeared them to us and for which we deem no words adequate to express our appreciation, yet we desire to partially express our thanks for the courtesies extended; therefore

Resolved, That we extend to Co. B, and to the citizens of Adrian, a most hearty vote of thanks, and ever hold them in grateful remembrance, and whenever the opportunity is offered will return the compliment.

Resolved, That to Mr. Bradley, of the Hibbard House of Jackson, and Co. G of the same place, we extend our sincere thanks for the courtesies received at their hands while "on the march."

Ann Arbor, July 12, 1876.

A meeting of the Hayes and Wheeler Club will be held this evening.—Register.

Evening came. No bell rung, no band out, no light in Court House, no visible signs of a gathering of the masses in other quarters. Was it a dark lantern affair? or did the blacking man's free street concert prove too potent an opposition? We pause for a reply.

MARRIED.

In this city, July 10th, by the Rev. F. J. Van Epps, MARION GOODALE, of Scio, and Miss CATHARINE HARKINS, of Ann Arbor.

DIED.

On the morning of the 7th inst, after a long and painful illness of about five months, Mrs. JULIA A. GOTT, wife of John N. Gott, of this city.

Mrs. Gott was born in Brookfield, Connecticut, on the 26th day of September, 1817; was educated at the Albany Female Seminary, and in 1834 graduated with the highest honors of that institution. Immediately after she was appointed Principal of the Jonesville Female Seminary in Saratoga county, New York, where she remained until the fall of of 1836, when she resigned for the purpose of taking charge of a select school at Port Royal, Virginia, where she remained one year. On the 19th day of October, 1837, she was married at St. Peter's Church, Albany, New York, and on the same day left with her husband for the city of Detroit, where they resided (with the exception of a few months at Grandville) for three years. In the month of April 1840, they removed to this city. Enterprising and accomplished she soon discovered that there was here a field for labor in educating young ladies, and immediately established a Young Ladies' Seminary, which she continued in a prosperous condition about three years, when, on account of failing health, she relinquished it, and devoted her time to her domestic duties and the education of an only daughter. In December, 1864, she heard of the tragical death of her younger brother on the mail train of cars between Port Huron and Detroit, and her nervous system received such a shock that she never recovered from it. She leaves a husband, one daughter (Mrs. Jutia A. Pitkin), four grandchildren, and three brothers (Chauncey H. Millen, Philo B. Millen, and Daniel S. Millen) to mourn her loss. Her funeral took place on Sunday evening at St. Andrew's Church. The the bearers were ex-Gov. Felch, H. W. Rogers, E. C. Seaman, H. J. Beakes, Lewis C. Risdon, C. H. Richmond, Silas H. Douglas, Samuel P. Jewett, James P. Boyd, James McMahon, Philip Bach, and Charles Spoor.

COM.

In this city, June 26, of old age, Frank F. Beal, aged 79 years, father of Mrs. Ann Crampton, of this city.

In Sacramento, Cal., on June 10th, Johnson Beal, aged 49 years, brother of Mrs. Ann Crampton, of Ann Arbor.

WOOL WANTED!

Or what is about the same thing, I want the money that buys it. Now as the lambs are all shorn, and the price of wool established and no prospect of being any higher, and I have had many and very faithful promises of pay in wool time, thus far but very few have been on time with those promises. Now I simply say to all delinquents who owe me that the best thing they can do is to give this their first attention, especially those who have let their bills run from one to two years. All such may expect me to drop down on them like a bat on a bedbug. I will appear to you like a midnight assassin in an unexpected hour. Now I simply say to all those owing me, no matter how great or how small the amount, to walk right up to the scratch and pay me, or I shall lose no time in inviting you before a Justice of the Peace. Now don't fool yourselves by thinking he won't sue me, or he is lying or joking about this matter. Neglect this and you will find out about this joking. 1591m2

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

THE Centennial watch-night demonstration at Philadelphia on the evening of the 3d inst. are described as brilliant and grand beyond all comparison. A procession containing thirty thousand people, bearing torches, devices and transparencies, paraded the streets up to midnight, and when the stroke of 12 o'clock was heard, the advent of the one-hundredth anniversary of the nation's birth was greeted by a vast multitude with cheers and rejoicings. The exercises on the Fourth were carried out according to the programme, and are described as magnificent. The street pageant was one of the grandest ever witnessed. The Declaration of Independence was read from the original manuscript by a grandson of Richard Henry Lee, one of the signers of the document, Bayard Taylor recited from memory the poem which he had prepared for the occasion, and Hon. William M. Evarts delivered an eloquent oration....While Dr. Bucher, proprietor of a drug-store in Philadelphia, was preparing colored fires for a pyrotechnic display on the 4th, there was a terrible explosion which shattered the building, and then set it on fire, completely destroying it. The Doctor was instantly killed, as were also his brother, John H. Bucher, and Bernard Kanseman and William Young. J. C. Bucher, father of the Doctor, was badly burned..... The coal mining and transportation companies having recently suspended operations in the Pennsylvania mining region, for the alleged reason that the supply of coal greatly exceeds the demand, thousands of miners are idle, and the consequence is turbulence and crime. Great lawlessness is reported in Carbon, Schuylkill, Lehigh and other counties. Riots are of daily and nightly occurrence, and a number of murders are reported.

A DISPATCH from Augusta, Me., says: "Mr. Blaine has now been home eight days. So far, there has been no special change in his case. The nervous prostration is still a marked characteristic. He is not able to leave his room, and is almost entirely confined to his bed. His physician thinks it will be many weeks before he will resume active work. An European trip is strongly recommended as soon as his strength is sufficient."

CASTLE GARDEN, the famous old wooden structure whereat millions of immigrants landing in New York have first set foot on the shores of America, has been destroyed by fire.

THE potato bug, which has been busily at work in New York and Pennsylvania during the early part of the season, is now literally destroying the potato crop in Connecticut and in some other parts of New England.

THE WEST.

A TRAPEZE performer named Collier met his death in a tragic manner at Chicago, a few days since. He had concluded an engagement at the Coliseum, and while engaged in taking down his ropes and trapeze apparatus fell from the roof of the building to the floor. The unfortunate man struck on his head, and, his brains being dashed out, death ensued almost instantaneously. He left a wife and two children.

THE city of Burlington, Iowa, was visited by a terrific tornado on the night of July 4. Thirty-nine buildings were riddled to pieces, and scarcely a house in the city escaped injury. Three persons were killed and a large number of others more or less injured.

CROP reports from 238 points in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Kentucky and Tennessee are published in the Cincinnati Gazette. From these reports it appears that the season thus far has been very propitious for growing most kinds of grain, but just as the harvest approaches there is threatened disaster from continued rains, from all points except Tennessee and Southern Kentucky. Fears of the destruction of a portion of the crops from this cause are entertained. As the crops now stand, wheat promises a yield of two-thirds; oats less than an average crop; corn, an unusually large crop; hay in abundance, but rank and weedy, and wheat suffering considerably from the ravages of the weevil.

THE feeling of excitement and indignation over the massacre of Gen. Custer and his comrades is intense throughout the West, particularly in the Territories, and thousands of men are eager to organize for the punishment of the red devils. There is a general feeling that the Indians ought to be wiped out....The movement to organize a force of volunteers to take part in the Indian campaign has assumed a definite shape in Utah. A regiment of 1,200 frontiersmen, armed to the teeth with weapons which they know how to use, well mounted and equipped, will be tendered to the Secretary of War, and, if accepted, the regiment will be recruited without delay and put in readiness to march against the hostile Sioux. ....Jacob Rehm, the arch-conspirator of the Chicago whisky ring, has been sentenced to six months' imprisonment in jail and ordered to pay a fine of $10,000. His punishment was light in consequence of his having turned State's evidence.

ANOTHER daring railway robbery took place in Western Missouri on the night of July 8. The express train which left Kansas City on the Missouri Pacific railway at 4:45 o'clock on the evening named was boarded by highwaymen near Otterville Station. The bandits seized the United States Express messenger, and, with pistols pointed at his head, compelled him to open the safe. They robbed the safe of all the money and valuables it contained, some $15,000, and after dumping their plunder into a sack, which one of the robbers carried, quietly left without interfering with any of the passengers. As they were leaving the leader said to the passengers: "If you see any of Allen Pinkerton's men, tell them they had better come and find us." There were eight of the bandits, and they are believed to be a part of the notorious Younger gang. Parties were organized, and at last accounts were in hot pursuit of the bandits. The reinforcements ordered to join Crook and Terry will give each of these commanders at least 2,000 effective fighting men—a force that should suffice, under judicious handling, to give a good account of any bands of Indians they may encounter.

THE propeller St. Clair, from Duluth to Ontonagon, was burned on Lake Superior, off Fourteen-Mile point, on the 10th inst. The fire caught in the hold, and in less than five minutes the boat was enveloped in flames from one end to the other. Owing to the rapidity with which the flames spread but one boat was launched. Life-preservers were brought on deck, and all succeeded in putting one on, when a rush was made for the yawl, which was swamped six or seven times. The water was very cold, and it was not long before all but one of the passengers, sixteen in number, perished, together with ten of the crew. When the boat caught fire she was about five miles from shore.... The Crow scout heretofore reported as having escaped massacre at the Custer charge proves to be the only survivor of that terrible slaughter. He was in the fight, but escaped to the river, washed off his Crow paint, changed the dress of his hair, put on a Sioux blanket, and charged with the Sioux, escaping, however, when an opportunity presented. He says the Sioux completely enveloped Custer, who killed his horse, using their remains for breastworks, and fought desperately, the Indians charging his position time and again, losing heavily, the Crow believes more than Custer. One company, that of Capt. Smith, tried to cut its way to the rear, but all were killed and their bodies lay some rods from Custer, all in a little knot. Custer was among the last to fall. Col. Cook, with his heavy, flowing beard, was the last one standing that the Indian recognized. Custer and command were all killed within an hour. Custer's command having been finished, the Indians gathered their entire force about Reno, leaving the squaws to mutilate the dead and torture any who proved to be living. The remains bear many evidences of torture. The tortures practiced upon some were of an unmentionable nature. The heads of nearly all had been crushed with stone clubs, while in other cases their heads were severed from the body. The entrails had been taken, and from many the limbs were chopped off. Other bodies were partially burned, a few were not found, but clothing belonging to them was found and recognized. ....Advices from the grasshopper region of Minnesota are to the effect that the troublesome pests have taken wings and are flying away in a northwestern direction. The farmers are represented as happy over the unexpected turn of affairs, and calculate upon at least an average yield of grain....Sioux City, Iowa, is red hot for war. The city tenders the Government, for the Indian service, 1,000 men, with horses and bridles, and a transportation train, to be ready to move within ten days after their acceptance.

POLITICAL.

THE Louisiana Republicans held their State Convention at New Orleans last week. S. B. Packard was nominated for Governor, and C. C. Antoine (colored), present incumbent, for Lieutenant Governor.

GOV. CONNOR, of Maine, has appointed Mr. Blaine, to succeed Mr. Morrill in the United States Senate from that State.

WASHINGTON.

THE Dutch steamer Lieutenant General Kroesen recently foundered in the straits of Sunda, in the East Indies. Two hundred and thirty lives were lost....Our Centennial Fourth of July was celebrated by 30,000 people in Dublin, Ireland; it was also appropriately observed by the Americans in Berlin, Germany; Geneva, Switzerland, and other European centers....The Khedive of Egypt will furnish the Porte 12,000 soldiers.

NO LESS than four murders were perpetrated in Washington on Independence Day, all resulting from too much bad whisky.

EX-SECRETARY BRISTOW was before the subcommittee of the House on the 6th inst., and, after a few preliminary questions, was asked what attitude the President and Attorney General assumed at the outset of the whisky prosecutions. Gen. Bristow answered that, without affirming or denying anything as to the relations which the committee sought to inquire about, he held that all consultations between the President and his Cabinet officers should be treated as matters of high privilege, and, on that ground, he respectfully but emphatically declined to answer.

WASHINGTON advices say that it is probable Congress will adjourn about the 20th of July.

A WASHINGTON dispatch of the 8th says: "Gen. Sherman arrived here last evening, and, in company with several prominent army officers, had a consultation with the President. It is decided that there is but one course to pursue, and that is to make a more active warfare against the rebellious Sioux until they are severely punished and made to live upon their reservation."

THE recent hot weather in Washington has alarmed members of Congress, and there is expressed among them a general desire to get away from the capital as soon as possible.

GENERAL.

A FEATURE of the Centennial July celebration in Philadelphia was the assemblage in the historic room of Independence Hall of 130 authors, there gathered to hand in their sketches of the lives of the signers of the Declaration and other Revolutionary patriots. Among the authors were Robert C. Winthrop, Charles Francis Adams, Gen. John A. Dix, Thomas Wentworth Higginson and John Esten Cooke.

THE diamond necklace and earrings sent by the Khedive of Egypt to Mrs. Minnie Sherman Fitch have been taken from the vaults of the United States sub-Treasury in New York, and sent to the acting Secretary of the Treasury at Washington, who will deliver them to Gen. Sherman in accordance with the resolution of Congress.

TWELVE companies of troops have been ordered west, to reinforcement Gen. Terry.

THE purser of the steamship Tybee, from San Domingo, has forwarded to the Secretary of State, from the American Consulate at that port, the details of an insult to the American flag. It seems that the Tybee, when on the way from New York to San Domingo, took on board, as a passenger at Cape Haytien, Gen. Pablo Villanneva, the ex-Minister of War and Marine under President Gonzales, of San Domingo. When the Tybee was lying at the latter port she was boarded by armed soldiers, who, despite the remonstrances of the American Consul and the Captain of the vessel, seized Villanueva and carried him ashore.... Western Congressmen are urging on the War Department the acceptance of State volunteers for the Indian war as the most effective and economical plan for the speedy subjugation of the hostile tribes.

FOREIGN.

ACTIVE hostilities have begun between Servia and Turkey, and the fear is general that the contest will assume continental proportions. On the 2d inst. the Servians crossed the Turkish frontier at three points, and simultaneously the Prince of Montenegro led his army into Herzegovina. Servia is a semi-independent principality, placed by the treaty of Paris under the protection of the contracting powers, but tributary to Turkey. Its ruler is Prince Milan, born in 1855. Its area is 12,600 square miles, or a little greater than the State of Maryland, and it is separated from the lower Adriatic by Dalmatia, Bosnia and Herzegovina. The population in 1861 was 1,098,281 ....A battle was fought between the Turks and Servians on the 3d of July, in which the latter were defeated with the loss of nearly 3,000 in killed, wounded and captured. The Turkish loss was 450 killed and 800 wounded....Austria is rapidly placing her army on a war footing.

THE venerable ex-President Santa Anna died in the City of Mexico on the 24th of June. ....A cable dispatch announces the death of Cassimer Perier, the distinguished French statesman....The English cotton trade is seriously depressed.

A SERVIAN victory of considerable importance is announced in the cable dispatches. After ten hours of desperate fighting at Rachka, the Turks fled, and the place fell into the hands of the Servians....The Americans in Constantinople enthusiastically honored the Fourth. Horace Maynard, American Minister, presided, read the Declaration of Independence, and made a speech.

THE war upon which the Servians were in such haste to enter, has been rather disastrous to them thus far, if the accounts of recent engagements are to be believed. Dispatches from Belgrade admit a loss of 700 in the fight on the line of the Drin, and other accounts assert that the Turks were also victorious in a battle at Novi Bazar, where the Servian loss was 1,500 in killed and wounded.

A COLLIERY explosion near Saint Arold, Germany, recently, killed forty-two and wounded forty-seven miners.

FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

MONDAY, July 3.—Senate.—The Senate spent the day in the resolution to pay P. B. S. Pinchback the expenses of his Senatorial contest. The resolution was made the text of some speeches of a political nature, Bayard and Morton taking the lead for their respective sides in the debate. Adjourned to Wednesday.

House.—The Speaker called on the States for bills, and half a dozen of a private nature were introduced and referred. Several filibustering motions were made to consume the morning hour and prevent the introduction of Neal's bill for the repeal of the Resumption act. ...Oliver moved to suspend the rules and adopt the resolution appointing a select committee to inquire into the disposition made of 1,200,000 acres of land granted for the improvement of the Des Moines rapids. On motion of Holman the Committee on Public Lands was substituted for the select committee, and the motion, as modified, was adopted....Holman stated that the conference committee on the Postoffice Appropriation bill had agreed, and the bill was being printed.

WEDNESDAY, July 5.—Senate.—Sherman introduced a joint resolution reciting that "We, the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled, in the name of the people of the United States, in this, the beginning of the second century of our national existence, direct and assume the completion of the Washington monument, in the city of Washington, and do direct the committees of both houses to institute the necessary provisions of law to carry this resolution into effect." It was adopted by a unanimous vote....The bill to encourage and promote telegraphic communication between Asia and America was passed....The conference report on the Postoffice appropriation bill was agreed to....The Senate devoted the entire afternoon to the consideration of the resolution giving pay and mileage to P. B. S. Pinchback, amounting to some $20,000. Attempts were made to amend by adding other unsuccessful claimants of seats, but only the claim of Mr. Sykes, of Alabama, was accepted, and then the resolution was passed by a vote of 27 ayes to 11 nays.

House.—Seelye offered a resolution, calling on the Secretary of the Interior for information regarding what portion of the Indian trust funds has been invested in securities other than stocks of the United States since 1841. Adopted. The House agreed to the conference report on the Postoffice Appropriation bill.

THURSDAY, July 6.—Senate.—A resolution was adopted providing for the appointment of a committee of three Senators to visit the Pacific coast and investigate the character, extent and effect of Chinese immigration to this country.... The Senate resumed consideration of the articles of impeachment against W. W. Belknap, late Secretary of War. Lynde made the opening argument on the part of the managers. Some half-dozen witnesses were examined, principally with reference to the moneys passing between Marsh and McDowell.

House.—The House passed the Geneva Award bill....Randall reported that the conference committee on the Legislative, Executive and Judicial bills had been unable to agree. After a long partisan debate, participated in chiefly by Garfield and Cox, the conference report was agreed to, and a new committee of conference appointed, consisting of Randall, Morrison, and Kasson.... Conference committees were ordered on the Silver bill and on the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill.... The Senate joint resolution for the completion of the Washington monument was taken from the Speaker's table and passed unanimously.

FRIDAY, July 7.—Senate.—Windom introduced a bill extending and continuing for a period of ten days the act recently passed to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government. ....A bill was passed providing for the sale of the Fort Kearney military reservation in Nebraska.... There was an acrimonious partisan debate in the Senate on the general subject of appropriation bills. Morrill, Logan and Morton bitterly assailed the course of the House in adhering to its reductions, which they claimed would cripple the Government, and amounted virtually to nullification and revolution. Thurman and Bogy replied with great warmth, and defended the action of the House in reducing expenses, arguing that the Senate had no right to assail the motives of the lower house. That body, they claimed, had acted in obedience to the voice of the people. New conference committees were then appointed upon the General and Sundry Civil Appropriation bills....A bill was passed to remove the political disabilities of G. T. Beauregard, of Louisiana....Paddock introduced a bill authorizing the President to accept the services of volunteers from the Territories, to be employed against the Indians, limiting the number to five regiments and the term of enlistment to three months....The impeachment trial was resumed. Belknap's counsel changed their tactics, and sharply cross-examined the witnesses, but no new facts were elicited. The managers appeared especially anxious to prove the receipt of the money by Belknap, and they succeeded.

House.—Bills were passed establishing the rank of Paymaster General in the army, repealing the law authorizing the appointment of civil engineers in the navy, and compelling the Pacific railroads to set apart out of their earnings a sum to apply in the payment of their debt to the Government.

SATURDAY, July 8.—Senate.—A bill continuing for ten days the act recently passed to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government was passed; also a bill extending for the same time an act authorizing the Congressional Printer to continue the public printing....Logan moved to take up the House bill to equalize the bounties of soldiers who served in the late war for the Union. Lost; yeas, 20; nays, 25. Logan gave notice that he would move to take up the bill every morning, and he would call for the yeas and nays on the motion.... Sherman introduced a bill providing for the completion of Washington monument....A message was received from the House announcing the death of Edward Y. Parsons, of Kentucky, and, on motion of McCreery, the Senate, as a mark of respect, adjourned until 11 o'clock on Monday.

House.—The House was engaged the greater part of the day in debating the bill reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs, declaring the country north of the North Platte river and east of the summit of the Big Horn mountain, in Wyoming Territory, open to exploration and settlement....Knott announced the sudden and unexpected death of his colleague Edward Y. Parsons, and offered resolutions for the appointment of a committee to superintend the funeral and to attend the remains to Louisville. The resolutions were adopted, and Blackburn, Hopkins, Hartsell, Walker, Fort, Lawrence and Clark were appointed such committee.

MONDAY, July 10.—Senate.—Wright, from the Committee on Judiciary, reported a bill to extend the duration of the court commissioners of Alabama claims until Nov. 1 next....After the transaction of some unimportant business the impeachment trial was resumed. The witnesses examined were Mr. Rice, the editor of the New York Tribune, Mr. Marsh, the original post-trader of Fort Sill, on whose testimony before a House committee the impeachment of Belknap was based, and Gen. Hazen, who was instrumental in the exposure of the Fort Sill scandal. Their testimony was very damaging to Belknap.

House.—The House passed a bill continuing for ten days the act defraying temporarily the ordinary and necessary expenditures of the Government.... Banning offered a resolution calling on the Secretary of War for information in regard to the object of the military expedition under Gens. Terry, Crook and Gibbon against the Northwestern Indians. Singleton, from the conference committee on the Diplomatic and Consular Appropriation bill, reported that the committee had not yet been able to agree. After an animated debate a new conference was appointed....Holman moved to suspend the rules and adopt a resolution instructing the Committee on Banking and Currency to report for consideration and amendment a bill to repeal so much of the Resumption act as provides for the resumption of United States notes with coin. Negatived—yeas, 105; nays, 96; not two-thirds in the affirmative.

HORRIBLE INDIAN BUTCHERY.

Gen. Custer and Five Companies of Cavalry Massacred by Sioux—Not a Soul Escapes to Tell the Terrible Story.

SALT LAKE, July 5.—A special correspondent of the Helena (Mont.) Herald writes from Stillwater, Mont., July 2: "Muggins Taylor, scout for Gen. Gibbon, got here last night direct from Little Horn river. Gen. Custer found the Indian camp of about 2,000 lodges on the Little Horn, and immediately attacked the camp. Custer took five companies and charged the thickest portion of the camp. Nothing is known of the operations of this detachment, only as they trace it by the dead. Major Reno commanded the other seven companies, and attacked the lower portion of the camp. The Indians poured in a murderous fire from all directions. Besides, the greater portion fought on horseback. Custer, his two brothers, a nephew, and a brother-in-law were all killed, and not one of his detachment escaped. Two hundred and seven men were buried in one place, and the killed are estimated at 300, with only 31 wounded. The Indians surrounded Reno's command, and held them one day in the hills, cut off from water, until Gibbon's command came in sight, when they broke camp in the night and left.

"The Seventh fought like tigers, and were overcome by mere brute force. The Indian loss cannot be estimated, as they bore off and cached most their killed. The remnant of the Seventh Cavalry and Gibben's command are returning to the mouth of the Little Horn, where the steamboat lies. The Indians got all the arms of the killed soldiers. There were seventeen commissioned officers killed.

"The whole Custer family died at the head of their column. The exact loss is not known, as both Adjutants and the Sergeant Major were killed. The Indian camp was three to four miles long and was twenty miles up the Little Horn from its mouth. The Indians actually pulled men off their horses in some instances. I give this as Taylor told me, as he was over the field after the battle. The above is confirmed by other letters, which say Custer met a fearful disaster."

FURTHER HORRIBLE CONFIRMATION.

SALT LAKE, Utah, July 5.—The Times' extra from Bozeman, Mont., July 3, 7 p. m., has the following: "Mr. Taylor, bearer of dispatches from the Little Horn to Fort Ellis, arrived this evening and reports the following: The battle was fought on the 25th, 30 or 40 miles below the Little Horn. Custer attacked the Indian village of from 2,500 to 4,000 warriors on one side, and Col. Reno was to attack it on the other. Three companies were placed on a hill as a reserve. Gen. Custer and 15 officers, and every man belonging to the five companies was killed. Reno retreated under the protection of the reserve. The whole number killed was 315. Gen. Gibbon joined Reno. The Indians left the battle-ground like a slaughter pen, as it really was, being in a narrow ravine. The dead were much mutilated. The situation now looks serious. Gen. Terry arrived at Gibbon's camp on a steamboat, and crossed the command over, and accompanied it to join Custer, who knew it was coming before the fight occurred. Lieut. Crittenden, son of Gen. Crittenden, was among the killed."

LATER PARTICULARS.

RENO'S PRELIMINARY FIGHT AND THE TERRIBLE SUFFERINGS OF HIS TROOPS—THIRTY-SIX HOURS SURROUNDED BY INDIANS, AND WITHOUT WATER, AWAITING CUSTER, WHO NEVER CAME—A BOLD STROKE FOR LIBERTY SUCCEEDS AND REVEALS TO THEM THEIR BUTCHERED COMRADES.

The correspondent of the Chicago Times telegraphs from Bismarck, under date of July 6, the following additional details of this horrible butchery:

In a recent dispatch, I informed you that Custer expected to strike the Indians and give them battle on the 24th. As stated, he left the mouth of the Rosebud on the 22d, with twelve companies of the Seventh Cavalry, striking the trail where Reno left it, leading in the direction of the Little Horn, a branch of the Big Horn. On the evening of the 24th, scouts reported fresh trails, and on the morning of the 25th discovered an Indian village twenty miles above the mouth of the Little Horn, about three miles long and half a mile wide, fifteen miles away. Custer pushed his command rapidly through. They had made a long march, in all seventy-eight miles, in the twenty-four hours preceding the battle, and when near the village struck an abandoned tepee. While the Indians were moving in hot haste as if in retreat, Reno, with seven companies of the Seventh Cavalry, was ordered to the left to attack the village at its head, while Custer, with five companies went to the right and commenced a vigorous attack. Reno left of them with three companies of cavalry, and was almost instantly surrounded, and after an hour or more of desperate fighting, during which he lost Lieuts. Hodgson and McIntosh, Dr. DeWolf, and twelve men, with several Indian scouts killed, and many wounded, he cut his way through the Indians, crossed the river, and gained a bluff 300 feet in height, where he intrenched and was soon joined by Col. Benton with four companies. In the meantime the Indians resumed the attack, which had abated in vigor for an hour or so, making repeated desperate charges, which were repulsed with great slaughter to the Indians. They gained higher bluffs, however, than the one occupied by Reno, and as their arms were longer range and better than those of the cavalry, they kept up a galling fire until nightfall. During the night Reno strengthened his position and was prepared for the attack which was received at daylight. The day wore on. Reno had lost in killed and wounded a large portion of his command, forty odd having been killed before the bluff was reached, many of them in hand-to-hand conflict with the Indians, who outnumbered them ten to one, and his men had been without water thirty-six hours. The appeals of the wounded for water were indeed heartrending, while the others were almost exhausted, in many instances their tongues protruding from their mouths, and few could speak aloud. They tried to eat crackers but could not moisten them, while the grass blades, which some ate to give relief, clung to their parched lips. In this state of affairs they determined to gain water at all hazards, and Col. Benton made a rally with his company and routed the main portion of the Indians who were guarding the approach to the river, to which the soldiers volunteered to go with camp-kettles and canteens for water. The Indian sharp-shooters were nearly opposite the mouth of the ravine, through which the brave boys approached the river, but the attempt was made and though one man was killed and seven wounded, the water was gained and the command relieved. When the fighting ceased for the night, Reno caused his animals to be likewise relieved, and further prepared for the attack, which he knew would be resumed on the next morning. Officers and men kept in good heart, but all wondered what had become of Custer. There had been forty-eight hours of fighting and no word from their respected commander.

Twenty-four hours more of fighting and suspense ensued, when the Indians abandoned their village in great confusion. Then Reno knew that succor was near. Gen. Terry, with Gibbon's command, and his own infantry had arrived, and, as the comrades in arms met, strong men wept on the necks of each other. After congratulations to the gallant commander for his successful defense, inquiries were made for Custer, but none could tell where he was. Soon an officer came rushing into camp and related that he had found Custer dead, stripped naked, but not mutilated, and near him his two brothers, Col. Tom and Boston Custer; his brother-in-law, Col. Calhoun, and nephew. Col. Yates; Col. Keogh, Capt. Smith, Lieut. Crittenden, a son of Gen. Crittenden; Lieut. Sturgis, a son of Gen. Sturgis; Col. Cooke, Lieut. Porter, Lieut. Harrington, Dr. Lord, Mark Kellogg, the Bismarck Tribune reporter, the only correspondent with the expedition, and 190 men and scouts. Custer went into the battle with companies C, I, I, E, and E, of the Seventh Cavalry, the staff and the non-Commissioned staff of his regiment, and a number of scouts, and only one Crow scout remains to tell the tale. All are dead. Custer was surrounded on every hand by the Indians, and his men and horses fell as they fought on the skirmish line or in the line of battle. Custer was among the last to fall, but when his cheering voice was no longer to be heard the Indians made easy work of the remainder. The bodies of all, save the Tribune correspondent alone, were stripped and most of them horribly mutilated. Custer's was not mutilated. He was shot through the body and through the head. Kellogg lay in the field as he fell, undisturbed. The Indians lost heavily in the battle. When Terry reached their village the camp was strewn with robes gaudily painted, with finely-dressed hides and interesting or valuable Indian trinkets. In a burial tent they left nine of their chiefs, whose spirits had flown to the happy hunting-ground arrayed most gorgeously. In the ravines the dead were abandoned by the Indians, evidently in their solicitude for the wounded. Here was found the Crow scout who survived the battle by hiding in a ravine. He believes their loss to have been greater than the loss of the whites, for in the battle they were so much more numerous and were the assaulting party after the first dash. Col. Reno and his officers agree with this estimate. The village numbered 1,000 lodges, and many willow tepees had been added within a few days. It is believed by those who fought that the warriors must have numbered 4,000. The casualties foot up 261 killed, and 52 wounded. Thirty-eight of the wounded were brought to Fort Lincoln, and the remainder, excepting the three who died, were cared for on the field. Charley Reynolds was also killed. Reynolds, with Kellogg, De Wolf, Reed, Boston Custer, and Lord were the only citizens killed.

HAYES.

His Letter Accepting the Nomination for the Presidency.

COLUMBUS, O., July 8.

The Hon. Edward McPherson, the Hon. William A. Howard, the Hon. Joseph H. Rainey, and others, Committee of the Republican National Convention:

GENTLEMEN—In reply to your official communication of June 17, by which I am informed of my nomination for the office of President of the United States by the Republican National Convention at Cincinnati, I accept the nomination with gratitude, hoping that, under Providence, I shall be able, if elected, to execute the duties of the high office as a trust for the benefit of all the people.

I do not deem it necessary to enter upon any extended examination of the declaration of principles made by the convention. The resolutions are in accord with my views, and I heartily concur in the principles they announce. In several of the resolutions, however, questions are considered which are of such importance that I deem it proper to briefly express my convictions in regard to them.

The fifth resolution adopted by the convention is of paramount interest. More than forty years ago a system of making appointments grew up, based upon the maxim, "To the victors belong the spoils." The old rule—the true rule—that honesty, capacity and fidelity constitute the only real qualifications for office, and that there is no other claim, gave place to the idea that party services were to be chiefly considered. All parties, in practice, have adopted the system. It has been essentially modified since its first introduction; it has not, however, been improved. At first the President, either directly or through the heads of departments, made all the appointments. But gradually the appointing power, in many cases, passed into the control of the members of Congress. The offices in these cases have become not merely rewards for party services, but rewards for services to party leaders. This system destroys the independence of the separate departments of the Government. It tends directly to extravagance and official incapacity; it is a temptation to dishonesty; it hinders and impairs that careful supervision and strict accountability by which alone faithful and efficient public service can be secured; it obstructs the prompt removal and sure punishment of the unworthy; in every way it degrades the civil service and the character of the Government; it is felt, I am confident, by a large majority of the members of Congress, to be an intolerable burden and an unwarrantable hindrance to the proper discharge of their legitimate duties; it should be abolished. The reform should be thorough, radical and complete. We should return to the principles and practice of the founders of the Government, supplying by legislation, when needed, that which was formerly established by custom. They neither expected nor desired from the public officer any partisan service. They meant that public officers should owe their whole service to the Government and to the people. They meant that the officer should be secure in his tenure as long as his personal character remained untarnished, and the performance of his duties satisfactory.

If elected, I shall conduct the administration of the Government upon these principles, and all constitutional powers vested in the Executive will be employed to establish this reform:

The declaration of principles by the Cincinnati Convention makes no announcement in favor of a single Presidential term. I do not assume to add to that declaration, but, believing that the restoration of the civil service to the system established by Washington and followed by the early Presidents can be best accomplished by an Executive who is under no temptation to use the patronage of his office to promote his own re-election, I desire to perform what I regard as a duty in stating now my inflexible purpose, if elected, not to be a candidate for election to a second term.

On the currency question I have frequently expressed my views in public, and I stand by my record on this subject. I regard all the laws of the United States relating to the payment of the public indebtedness, the legal-tender notes included, as constituting a pledge and moral obligation of the Government which must in good faith be kept. It is my conviction that the feeling of uncertainty inseparable from an irredeemable paper currency, with its fluctuations of values, is one of the great obstacles to a revival of confidence and business, and to a return of prosperity. That uncertainty can be ended in but one way—the resumption of specie payments; but the longer the instability connected with our present money system is permitted to continue, the greater will be the injury inflicted upon our economical interests and all classes of society. If elected I shall approve every appropriate measure to accomplish this desired end, and shall oppose any step backward.

The resolution with respect to the public school system is one which should receive the hearty support of the American people. Agitation upon this subject is to be apprehended until, by constitutional amendment, the schools are placed beyond all danger of sectarian control or interference. The Republican party is pledged to secure such an amendment.

The resolution of the convention on the subject of the permanent pacification of the country, and the complete protection of all its citizens in the full enjoyment of all their constitutional rights, is timely and of great importance. The condition of the Southern States attracts the attention and commands the sympathy of the people of the whole Union. In their progressive recovery from the effects of the war, their first necessity is an intelligent and honest administration of government which will protect all classes of citizens in all their political and private rights. What the South most needs is peace, and peace depends upon the supremacy of law. There can be no enduring peace if the constitutional rights of any portion of the people are habitually disregarded. A division of political parties resting merely upon distinction of race, or upon sectional lines, is always unfortunate, and may be disastrous. The welfare of the South, alike with that of every other part of the country, depends upon the attractions it can offer to labor, to immigration, and to capital. But laborers will not go, and capital will not be ventured, where the Constitution and the laws are set at defiance, and distraction, apprehension and alarm take the place of peace-loving and law-abiding social life. All parts of the Constitution are sacred and must be sacredly observed, "the parts that are new no less than the parts that are old." The moral and material prosperity of the Southern States can be most effectually advanced by a hearty and generous recognition of the rights of all by all, "a recognition without reserve or exception."

With such a recognition fully accorded, it will be practicable to promote, by the influence of all legitimate agencies of the general Government, the efforts of the people of those States to obtain for themselves the blessings of honest and capable local government. If elected, I shall consider it not only my duty, but it will be my ardent desire, to labor for the attainment of this end. Let me assure my countrymen of the Southern States that if I shall be charged with the duty of organizing an administration, it will be one which will regard and cherish their truest interests, the interests of the white and of the colored people, both, and equally, and which will put forth its best efforts in behalf of a civil policy which will wipe out forever the distinction between the North and South in our common country.

With a civil service organized upon a system which will secure purity, experience, efficiency, and economy, a strict regard for the public welfare, solely, in appointments, and the speedy, thorough, and unsparing prosecution and punishment of all public officers who betray official trusts; with a sound currency; with education unsectarian and free to all; with simplicity and frugality in public and private affairs; and with a fraternal spirit of harmony pervading the people of all sections and classes, we may reasonably hope that the second century of our existence as a nation will, by the blessing of God, be pre-eminent as an era of good feeling and a period of progress, prosperity, and happiness. Respectfully, your fellow-citizen,

R. B. HAYES.

LAND GRANTS.

Republican Gifts to Railways and Corporations—278,758 Square Miles of Territory, Equal to 211 States the Size of Rhode Island, Presented to Monopolies—An Area Greater than Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Delaware, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Ohio and Indiana Taken From Settlers.

"We reaffirm our opposition to further grants of the public lands to corporations and monopolies, and demand that the national domain be devoted to free homes for the people."—Cincinnati Platform.

"Reform" is necessary to put a stop to the profligate waste of public lands, and their diversion from actual settlers by the party in power, which has squandered 200,000,000 acres upon railroads alone, and out of more than twice that aggregate has disposed of less than a sixth to tillers of the soil."—St. Louis Platform.
