MY LOVER.

BY EMMA MORTIMER WHITE.

At last I am blessed with a lover,
Just what a lover should be—
Devoted and constant, and handsome,
Handsome as handsome can be.

Devoted!—devoted, believe me!
He never has left me a day;
I am ever his pride and his darling—
Without me he cannot be gay.

He cares for no lovelier lady;
To him I am very fair;
Contented he rests on my bosom,
Kisses my lips and my hair.

Handsome!—his cheeks are like roses,
His head is run over with curls,
His forehead is white as a snowdrift,
His teeth glimmer clearer than pearls.

His eyes they are bright as the sunshine,
With lashes that cannot be beat,
And then I know that you've never Seen such hands and such feet.

Wealthy? He's careless of money—
Money to him is but dross;
Silver and gold, for my lover,
Are only for pitch and for toss.

He must have been born to a fortune—
He's lived at his ease ever since;
If you'd see but the style of his dressing,
You'd probably think him a prince.

Shirts thick frosted with stitching,
Silken embroidered socks;
I think the most of his money
He keeps in a painted box.

He'll show you a golden guinea,
On which he cut his first tooth,
Strung on an azure ribbon,
Tied with a love-knot, forsooth!

Of teeth he has half a dozen,
Set to the cunningest mold;
For I am my lover's mother—
For he is but one year old!

THE BANK ROBBERY.

"When you have something more to offer me beside yourself, Frank De Vere, I will accept you; not before."

This was Nellie Blanchard's reply to her companion's passionate avowal of love. She was cold, proud and beautiful; the only child of genteel, but poor parents. It was a matter of surprise to the neighbors that Frank De Vere had ever been allowed the privilege of calling on her at all. The truth was that Miss Blanchard was fond of making conquests. She met De Vere at the house of a friend; discovered that he was above mediocre in appearance and talent, and decided to make him a victim. How well she succeeded, after an acquaintance of a few months, we already know.

"Do you mean, Nellie Blanchard," said her lover, "that you refuse me because I am poor?"

"I mean what I said!"

Frank De Vere's passion for the woman before him amounted to idolatry. If it had been less, he, with his good sense, would have despised her.

"Nellie," he said, "if gold is all that separates us, it shall not sunder us long. Only promise me this—wait one year for me."

The woman hesitated a minute; she never had the most remote idea of marrying him, and she did not like to commit herself. Yet she must get rid of him some way. There was little danger of his making his fortune in a year, so she considered herself safe in saying, "Yes, Frank, I will wait for you."

"Then you are mine! I soon shall claim you! Until then, good-by!"

He clasped her in his arms a moment, gave her a lover's kiss, and was gone. She looked after him, not to sigh, but to thank Heaven that she had rid herself of him so easily.

It was in the days when California drew throngs of gold-hunters to its mines. Frank De Vere took passage the week after his last interview with Miss Blanchard, and in due time arrived safely at his journey's end. The weeks passed on. It was easier for De Vere to dream of wealth than to accumulate it. He had only been able on his arrival to obtain a situation as under-clerk in a banking-house. As his merit became known he had risen rapidly in favor with his employers, and was now occupying the position of cashier, with a large salary. Under ordinary circumstances he would have been contented; as the seeker of a fortune in a short space of time, he was not.

The allotted time of his stay was nearly at an end. With all his economy he had not laid up $1,000. He knew that Nellie Blanchard could not be bought for less than $50,000. Something must be done. What that something was he had not yet concluded when he retired to bed one eventful night in his life's history. The morning after that night, the porter of the house came running from the room where De Vere slept with one of the clerks, which opened into the one in which the safe was kept. The man's face was white with fear, and his eyes nearly starting from their sockets.

Out into the crowded street he went, screaming: "Murther! murther! A bloody murther!"

"Where?" said a policeman standing near.

"In there," pointing toward the young men's room.

It was a horrible, sickening sight. The clerk, Charlie Sowle, lay on the floor, with his face upturned, and stamped with intense suffering. Several ugly gashes were about his face and breast, from which the blood slowly trickled, helping to swell the crimson pool in which he lay. From his white lips, at intervals, there came a groan, which told the lookers-on he was not dead. On the bed lay Frank De Vere, gagged, firmly bound, having a deep flesh-wound in his arm, from which the blood had flowed so freely that the bed-linen was completely saturated.

He was speedily released, and asked by a dozen at once, "Who did it?"

"Between 2 and 3 this morning," he said, "I was awakened by Charlie, who whispered, 'Some one is at the safe.' I listened a moment, and distinctly heard a noise in the inner room. 'You are right, Sowle,' I said, and instantly felt for my revolver. It was not there. Alarmed, I asked Charlie in an undertone, 'Did you remove my pistol?' 'No; is it gone?' The next instant he added, 'Good heavens! mine is gone, too.' Together we arose, and crept softly to yonder door. There, with the safe open, by the dim light of a lantern, were two men masked, so that I cannot describe them. I would have stolen out of the house and sought help, but Charlie, who always was brave to a fault, would not listen to that. 'Don't you see our pistols lying there on the floor behind them?' he whispered; 'we will secure them yet.' And before I could offer the first objection he was half-way across the room, stealing on tip-toe toward them. A slight noise caused one of the villains to look round. Just as Charlie reached for his revolver they discovered him, and sprung upon him, and dragged him back into this room. I think they would have spared him had they not that instant caught sight of me. One ran a bowie-knife through him. The other sprung at me. Charlie fell back, saying, 'Oh, Frank! they have killed me.' The demon who had assassinated him did not seem to be content with his work, but inflicted the other wounds you see, hoping to make a sure job of it. I was unarmed, and could not effect much with my antagonist. I got this cut on my arm, and, the other man coming to his friend's help, I decided to offer no more resistance. So they gagged and bound me, and, after taking what they wanted, left us. Charlie, poor fellow! has laid there moaning ever since, at intervals, and I was powerless to help him.

Frank De Vere looked with anxious countenance at his companion.

"Do you think he will ever get over it?" he asked.

A physician in the room stooped and examined him.

"Well?" said De Vere.

"He will die," was the answer.

"Would that he could be spared," said Frank, as he bent over his friend with streaming eyes.

The dying man roused a little at the words, and, turning his eyes on De Vere's face, gave him a look fraught with such a sense of injury that one would have thought he imagined Frank his murderer. He closed them in a moment, and opened them no more. The wounded man was taken to a hospital, where he died that day.

It was found that the robbers had taken cash to the amount of $200,000. The police, after the most vigilant exertions to secure the murderers, were unable to discover them.

Frank De Vere would remain no longer in the place; he gave up his situation, and went to try his luck in the mines. Fate favored him. Gold came readily to his hand. In a short time he had accumulated more than he in his wildest dreams had ever hoped for. Satisfied with the fortune he had made, he started for his native town. As soon after his arrival as possible he called upon the woman who promised to wait for him. He found her in the parlor. Walking straight toward her, he held out his arms.

"Nellie, I have come to claim you."

Surprised though she was to see him, she could not be surprised into committing herself before she understood how affairs stood with him. So, before a word of welcome came from her lips, she asked: "Have you anything to offer besides Mr. De Vere?"

"Two hundred thousand dollars, Nellie."

She brightened instantly. To the haughty but needy belle the sum seemed enormous. She allowed the outstretched arms to embrace her, and the lips of the new-comer to kiss her.

"You will become Nellie De Vere?" he whispered.

"Yes, Frank."

After an evening spent in rehearsing the past and arranging for the future, they separated. When he had gone, she hid her face in the sofa, and wept bitterly.

"Albert," she murmured—"dear, dear Albert, the only one I ever loved, it is hard to give you up!"

Then, rising, she dashed the tears from her eyes, and, with clenched hands, paced the room to and fro, murmuring, "I am ashamed of you, Nellie Blanchard; I thought you were made of sterner stuff. Will you give up wealth and position for love in a cottage? No—never!"

So she decided to marry Frank De Vere. Before the year was out, she became his wife. Time passed away. Fate had been kind to Mr. and Mrs. De Vere, to all outward appearances. He had accumulated an immense fortune, and had risen high in favor with his fellow-men. Old Father Time had dealt leniently with his lady. Mrs. De Vere, twenty years a wife, was quite as beautiful, and much more voluptuous in figure, than Nellie Blanchard had been. It had not taken Frank De Vere long to learn that his wife did not care for him. He loved her so that for many years he had tried to make himself dear to her. The more he exerted himself to please her, the more disgusted she became with him. The poor man kept looking forward to the dawn of a brighter day, when the rosy leaves of hope were turned to bitter ashes by the humiliating discovery that the secret of the wife's aversion was that from the time she engaged herself to him her heart had belonged to another. She taunted him with the fact one day in a fit of anger.

"Why did you marry me, Nellie?" he asked.

"You know without asking—for your money."

"Then you sold yourself."

She winced a little.

"You do not love me?"

"I do not love you—never have—never will."

"Would you like the world to know this, and break the chain that binds us, which seems to gall you so?"

"No; 'twould gain me nothing."

"I believe I understand you, Mrs. De Vere. To the world, hereafter, we will be what we have seemed heretofore. At home, we are strangers. Does this suit you?"

"Yes."

The haughty dame swept from her husband's presence, glad that henceforth she would be free from the caresses of the man she could never love. The husband watched her out of sight, then fell to the ground, where he lay writhing in agony of mind, muttering, "Oh, merciful Heaven! my punishment is greater than I can possibly bear!"

After this they met only in the presence of their guests, or in company.

This was years ago, when Lulu (an affectionate diminutive for Louisa), their only daughter, was a wee child. She was 17, now; and, on the day of which I write, was looking forward with pleasing anticipation to the evening. For that evening she was "coming out." When the company assembled, Lulu moved among them like a spirit of light. Her lovely, innocent face was, perhaps, less perfect than her mother's. But, if perfection wore another charm, it was one which had no beauty for the score of lovers following in her train. The father stood at one side and gazed upon her, comparing her to a beautiful picture, and as far above the crowd around her as were the stars.

He was interrupted in his thoughts by a voice at his elbow exclaiming, "Who is that in the white satin dress, with diamonds in her hair?"

"Miss De Vere."

"She is a beauty, by Jove! and they say that her father is well off. I believe I shall marry her."

"Hush!" said the speaker's friend, in an undertone; "De Vere is not three feet from you."

"Ha! ha! what do I care? The old chap and I are friends; he will no doubt thank me for taking his daughter off his hands," he replied.

The host confronted the man angrily, but, instead of uttering the intended reprimand, he fell senseless to the floor. He was carried to his room, a physician called, who soon pronounced him out of danger. A message was sent to the man who had so singularly affected De Vere that he wanted to see him. The stranger obeyed the summons. Frank De Vere motioned to those attending him to leave the room, and beckoned the new-comer to his bedside. The man went in obedience to the gesture, and looked fearlessly down in the invalid's face.

"You have found me at last, Albert Carlton," moaned De Vere. "Now that you are here, what do you want?"

"Want? Dare you ask me? Coward, thief, murderer that you are! I have half a mind to kill you this moment in your bed."

And he glared fiercely on De Vere, while he held over him an open knife.

"Mercy! mercy!" gasped the poor man.

"It is easier for you to cry for mercy than it was to grant it," said Carlton.

"For God's sake, don't speak so loud," said De Vere, his face livid with fear. "I will make you any reparation you ask; only, for my child's sake, spare the honor of my house."

"It is beyond your power to bestow what you took from me," said Albert Carlton, fiercely. "I was sent by a woman who loved me, and whose passion I more than returned, to seek a fortune ere we were married. I had been a long time from her side, and, meeting with no success, I determined to make a bold stroke, rob the bank, and return with my booty home. You know how affairs turned out. It will serve you right to repeat them. I made my entrance into your room, and took your pistol before you discovered me. Sowle had not come in yet. I had no desire to shed blood, and was glad to spare your life on the conditions you spoke of—going halves. In the midst of our work Charlie Sowle interrupted us; he was at our mercy, yet we promised to spare him and take him in as a partner. You remember how indignantly he refused, and, with his pistol at my head, called aloud, 'Help, help!' Alarmed, you silenced him with your bowie-knife. He fell back gasping, imploring you, his old friend, to spare him. You had gone too far, and kept on with your bloody work until you had finished him. Ugh! it was an ugly job; I am glad my hands are washed from it. Then you planned that I should gag and tie you to your bed; you even wounded yourself, that the detectives might the more readily believe the tale you should tell. Afterward, you told me how well your plan had worked; how poor Sowle had lived through the night, and nearly terrified you to death for fear he would revive sufficiently to expose your crime; he died at last. You met me, received your share, went to the mines, pretended to make a fortune; and then when I had entrusted my share to your safe keeping you made off with it. I was in despair; for with the loss of my money I lost also the woman I loved, inasmuch as before I could make another adventure I learned that she was married. To whom I never heard, and whether now living I do not know."

"What can I do for you?" murmured De Vere.

"I want half you are worth."

"You shall have it."

"I will also take your daughter in marriage."

"Good heavens, Carlton, don't ask that of me!"

"Then you shall be exposed."

The man turned to go.

"Come back, Carlton; I'll do all I can for you. Dine with us to-morrow. Leave me now, for I suffer deeply."

The next day Carlton was punctual. He was made acquainted with Lulu at the dinner-table. In a few minutes her mother came in at the side door, and took her place at the table. The husband proceeded to introduce them.

"Mrs. De Vere, allow me to present you to my old acquaintance, Mr. Albert Carlton."

She looked up quickly as the name was spoken, flushed and paled alternately when she had looked Mr. Carlton in the face. Then, rising suddenly, she left the room.

At a later hour, Albert Carlton found himself alone in the library.

"To think of her as the wife of him who caused me to lose her is maddening!" he muttered to himself.

"Then you have not ceased to think of me?" said a voice at his side.

Turning about, he beheld Mrs. De Vere.

"Cease to think of you, Nellie! The love I bore you has been increasing from that day to this. And now, with a world of love in my heart for you, I am doomed to behold you the wife of another!"

"Oh, Albert," she said, "all these years that have separated us have been so dread and terrible!"

"Nellie! my darling, you almost make me think that there is happiness in store for us yet!"

"And ma there not be, Albert?"

"If you say so, Nellie."

He held out his arms to her, and she leaned her head against the breast that so many years ago had been her resting-place. Together they plotted to leave the house that night and flee to another country. That evening Frank De Vere gave Carlton the promised money.

"In the morning," said the father, "I will give you my daughter's answer."

That night De Vere came to the conclusion that it was a thing impossible to broach the subject to Lulu.

"Dead men tell no tales," he muttered, as he went to his desk and took from it a knife. Stealthily leaving his room, he stole toward his guest's chamber, which was at the end of the long passage. He was half-way there, when he detected the sound of muffled footsteps approaching him.

"The villain is coming to murder me," he thought; "he shall not escape me."

In a minute, he felt his enemy's breath upon his cheek, and knew it was his time to strike. So he grasped the figure, and made a thrust in the darkness with his knife. The victim made no resistance; only gave utterance to one unearthly shriek.

De Vere recognized the voice. It was his wife.

Terror-stricken, he stood bending over the inanimate form, when the door of his guest's room opened, and Albert Carlton came out with a light. De Vere stepped hastily aside in a niche devoted to statuary. When Carlton saw the woman he loved lying there weltering in her blood, he forgot to look for her murderer, but knelt beside her, kissing the cold lips, and whispering words of love to her. The sight maddened the husband.

"Devil! destroyer of my happiness, take that, and that, and that!" he shrieked, as he stabbed the man he so bitterly hated.

De Vere hurried to his room and locked himself in. He soon heard footsteps hurrying to and fro, and exclamations of horror. By a private passage he descended into the street, hailed a passing vehicle and drove away. He was sought after for months, but never found.

Years afterward, in a distant land, he learned that both Carlton and Mrs. De Vere recovered, and that they were living together.

"Thank Heaven," he said, "that my hands are washed from their blood; if Charlie Sowle were only living I might yet be a happy man."

A few months after this he wrote to Lulu, begging her to come to him. She went, and with her went her husband, a fine-looking man, many years her senior. When the father looked upon him his face assumed an ashy hue, and he gasped out, "Charlie Sowle, how came you here?"

"The hospital report was false; I did not die. I thought I could gain nothing by contradicting your story, so I let it pass. I subsequently became acquainted with your daughter; she loved me, as I did her. We were married. For her dear sake, I freely forgive you the injury you did me."

"If you will accept a blessing from as bloody a hand as mine has been," said De Vere, "take mine now."

He called Lulu, gave her hand to Charlie Sowle, pronounced a father's blessing, then fell back in his chair. Lulu, with a little shriek, went to him. He was dead.

Lulu had cause, after many years of domestic happiness, to thank a merciful providence that her father's hand had not murdered Charlie Sowle.

Long Lives and Healthy Ones.

"How few really die of old age!" observes Dr. Van Oven, in his interesting volume on the causes of longevity. To prove the truth of his remark, he gives the tables of 7,000 persons who lived ages from 100 to 185 years. The following are some of the instances he refers to: "Farr's death at 152 was premature, induced by a foolish change from the simple diet and active habits of a peasant to the luxurious ease and exciting foods of a country gentleman. His body was examined by the great Harvey, who found all the organs in so sound a condition that, but for intemperance and inactivity, he would, in all probability, have lived many years longer." An English gentleman named Hastings, who died in 1650 at the age of 100, rode to the death of a stag at 90. Thomas Wood, a parish clerk, lived to 106, and "could read to the last without spectacles, and only kept his bed one day." J. Witten, a weaver, was "never sick, never used spectacles, hunted a year before his death, and died suddenly at the age of 102. Francis Atkins was porter at the palace gate, Salisbury. It was his duty to wind up a clock which was at the top of the palace, and he performed his duty until within a year of his death, at 102. He was remarkably upright in his deportment, and walked well to the last. Margaret McDorval, a Scottish woman, who died at 106, married thirteen husbands, and survived them all. Cardinal de Sallis, who died in Spain in 1785, at the age of 110, used to say: "By being old when I was young, I find myself young now I am old. I led a sober, studious, but not lazy or sedentary life; my diet was ever sparing, though delicate; my liquors the best wines of Zeres and La Mancha, of which I never exceeded a pint, except in cold weather, when I allowed myself a pint more; I rode and walked every day, except in rainy weather, when I exercised for two hours. So far I took care of the body; and as to the mind, I endeavored to preserve it in due temper by a scrupulous obedience to the divine commands, and keeping (as the apostle directs) a conscience void of offense to God and man." J. Jacob, a native of Switzerland, "when 127 years old, was sent as a deputy to the National Assembly of France." He died the following year. Others might be mentioned, but we have only room to add that, within the past two centuries and a half, ten well-certified cases of individuals in England and Wales living to ages ranging from 152 to 200 years have occured; and here in modern times we have repeated the length of days commonly believed to belong exclusively to the patriarchal ages.

About Dogs.

Few persons are aware of the value, variety and weight of dogs, varying as they do from 180 pounds to less than one pound, and valued at from $500 to less than nothing. A description of different kinds of dogs may be interesting.

The Siberian blood-hound weighs about 160 pounds, measures 40 inches in girt, and is worth nearly $500.

The St. Bernard dog, which is a buff or light lead color, is very large and valuable.

The Newfoundland dog, when pure, is entirely black, and its pups are worth from $10 to $20.

The shepherd dog, or Scotch cooly, is wonderful for its patience, fidelity and bravery. It is worth from $50 to $100.

The English mastiff, a good watch dog, is worth from $15 to $25.

Of terriers, the black-and-tan is most admired. It varies in weight from 1 pound to 25 pounds, and increases in value as it decreases in weight. Terriers are often crossed with the Italian greyhound, producing a very delicate but extremely useless dog. The Scotch terrier is the hardiest of dogs, is very courageous, and is worth from $10 to $30.

Scotch deer-hounds are the rarest and most valuable of hunting dogs. They are owned principally by the nobility of England, and are worth $100 each.

The beagle is the smallest of the hound kind, has superior scent and endurance, and, in short, is the best sort of rabbit hunter.

English greyhounds, the fleetest of dogs, are worth from $25 to $100 each.

The Italian greyhound is merely a parlor dog. The pure breed is rare and valuable, a fine one being worth $150.

There is a great variety of pointers, setters and spaniels. The Prince-Charles variety is the most valuable of spaniels. He is supposed to have originated in Japan, where a similar breed exists. He has a large, full eye, black-and-tan color, and never weighs over ten pounds. They have been sold at auction in England at $2,000 each.

The coach dog is from Denmark, and is not of much value.

THE islands of Jersey, Guernsey, Aurigny and Sark, in the British channel, which have belonged to England since the time of William the Conqueror, still preserve the old French of that period as the language of the peasantry. The modern French is the language of the educated classes, though English is spoken, and the official language of the courts and governing bodies is French. An attempt was lately made to substitute English, but it was strongly resisted, and finally relinquished.

WATER-WAYS.

Interesting Letter from Ex-Gov. Seymour, of New York, to Senator Windom, o Minnesota.

DEAR SIR: I am glad to see that you hold your ground with regard to water routes. In a little time the public mind will be with you. In this State there has been a great change in the views of our people. High tolls, frauds and other abuses had run down our canals to a point so low that most men thought their days had gone by, and that they would be of little or no use in the future. The railroads pushed them hard to get them out of the way. In 1870 we began to fight for low tolls. After a time they were cut down from 6 to 3 cents on a bushel of wheat from Lake Erie to the Hudson river. This was done after very hard work to bring it about. They were then put down to 1½ cents, then to 1 cent over the whole length of the Erie canal. No one now makes war against these very low tolls, and a very large party has grown up which asks for free canals. Grain can be carried, and give the boats a fair profit, for less than the tolls paid the State a few years ago. Six cents a bushel is enough to pay the State, the boats and all charges.

The whole country has been stirred up about the kind of money we shall use. However grave this may be, it is a little matter compared with the question of our ability to sell to the world what we raise on our lands. If we can do this we shall have all the gold and silver we want. If we fail to do this we shall be poor, our credit will be low, and our money will be scarce and poor. We are to raise more grain than we ever have raised. The changes of times are driving men from the cities into the country. Those who come from Europe are mostly those who till the soil. A like state of things exist elsewhere. War may, for a time, make a call for our grain, but we must not count upon war which may not take place, and which, in any event, will soon be over. Can we sell our grain in Europe against those who raise grain in Europe? We can, if it does not cost too much to get it there, and this will turn upon a very small sum. The question is not, If it costs 3 cents more to get it to market, how much will this tax the States of the West? but, Will this little change stop the sale of our grain abroad? The men who know the most about this trade say that at most times it will. If 3 cents profit can be made it will be bought. If not, it will be left on the hands of our farmers to bear down the price of that which we use in this country. If it costs 3 cents too much to carry grain, we shall lose many millions of dollars. If the West does not sell its grain it cannot buy of the East what the East has to sell. The wheels of commerce and industry will all be checked.

To show you what the reduction of one-half a cent a bushel will do, I send you the report of the Comptroller of this State, which proves that, when about a year ago the toll was changed from 1½ cents to 1 cent per bushel it brought back the trade to the Erie canal. I wish you would note the fact that this was not due to the large crops of last year. Less grain was sent to the seaboard in 1877 than was sent in 1876, up to time the canals closed. What the canals gained last year the railroads lost, namely, about 18,000,000 bushels of wheat.

We do not know that there will be a war between Great Britain and Russia, but all must see that we are to have a long fight with Russia for the markets of Europe, and upon this turns the whole question of the revival of the trade and prosperity of our country.

Can our railroads give us a victory?

No one thinks of them more highly than I do. We cannot do without them. They have uses of their own which water-routes cannot meet. On the other hand, without water-routes they will and do charge more than they should. They have cost too much. They cannot live unless they make pools with each other. In other words, they say openly that it is not their policy to carry for a low price and thus make trade, but to carry less and charge more. They cannot make pools with water-routes, because each man owns his own boat. For this reason English railroads have bought up English canals to get them out of the way. They have done this in other countries in Europe. They have tried to break down the lake, river, and canal routes in this country. They will fail as to the great lakes and the Erie canal.

I do not know enough of the Mississippi river to speak about it. I hope its trade will be kept up. It may turn some from New York, but it will be for the good of the whole country, if it keeps the railroads in check. There must be a steamboat route from the Mississippi river to the great lakes. It will not only carry much grain, but it will do much more good by keeping down charges.

Just now most men think the water-routes have lost their value. The truth is, they grow in value as new railroads are made. The Erie canal was never worth so much to New York as it is today. It carries at a low rate, and makes the railroads do the same. I am very truly yours, etc., HORATIO SEYMOUR.

Coincidences of Dates.

In 1807 France was at war with Prussia. In 1870, which embraces the same figures reversed, there were again hostilities between them. In 1756 there was also war between the same powers, in which France sustained a terrible defeat. Just fifty years after that event, 1806, Prussia was humiliated, yea, more than that—almost destroyed, by the disastrous double battle of Jena and Auerstadt. In commenting upon that event, the English historian, Allison, whose sympathies were with Prussia, says: "Such were the disastrous battles of Jena and Auerstadt, which prostrated the strength of the Prussian monarchy, and in one day effected what the might of Russia, Austria and France had been unable to effect in the Seven Years' war, from 1765 to 1763." Curiously enough, sixty years from that time, in 1866, Prussia was raised to the height of power by the extraordinary results of the battle of Sadowa.

In 1805 the Russian power received a crushing defeat in the great battle of Austerlitz, in which three Emperors were present, viz.: The Emperors of France, Russia and Austria. The forces of the two latter were united, but four-fifth of those who participated in the struggle at Austerlitz were Russians. A half century passed away, and in 1855 the French and the Russians were contending for supremacy at Sebastopol, under Emperors of the same names as those who met in 1805.

In 1809 the French were at war with the Austrians, and entered Vienna in triumph. In 1859, at the end of a half centennial period, the same countries were engaged in a deadly contest, with even larger numbers, in Northern Italy. In 1779 the first Napoleon had seized, as First Consul, the supreme authority in France. In 1829, fifty years after, the third Napoleon had just been elected President of the same country.

Names of Vehicles.

Among the medley of names at present or recently given to pleasure carriages some are unintelligible, while others defy all etymological scrutiny. The landau is named from a town in Germany; it is a coach that may be used open or closed at pleasure. The landaulet, as its name implies, is a lighter and smaller landau. The barouche, a favorite open carriage in summer, is of French origin, as is the barouchet. The britzschka was introduced from Russia about half a century ago. Why the phaeton is so named we cannot pretend to say; but the vehicle so called belongs to the barouche and britzschka group. The cabriolet is French, and so is the vis-a-vis. Droitzschka came from Russia or Poland—an odd kind of an affair, modified in England into a vehicle fitted for invalids, aged persons and children, with its formidable name shortened into drosky. The curricle is one of the few kinds of two-wheelers with two horses abreast; while the tandem is a straggling affair with two wheels and two horses, but one of the horses behind the other. The cab (short for cabriolet) is a handy bachelor's vehicle; the gig is about the lightest of all, being little more than an open-railed chair, supported on the shafts by two side springs; the dog-cart is a gig, with a space underneath to contain either dogs or luggage; while the tilbury, named after the coachman who invented it, is a modified cab. The stanhope, named after a noble lord, is another of the family of single-horse two-wheelers; and so is the sulky, for one person only; and so the buggy, and the jaunting-car, and the whisky. The dennet, we are told, has three springs peculiarly arranged, and "was so called because the three springs were named after the three Miss Dennets, whose elegant stage-dancing was much in vogue about the time this vehicle came into use." The French misanthrope, for one person, was probably the origin of our sulky. The fly is a roomy carriage let out to hire; why it is so called is not quite clear. The French fiacre neither denotes a particular person nor a special origin; there happened to be a figure of St. Fiacre in the front of the building where the first lender of these vehicles kept them. When we consider how readily the name hansom has come into use among us, as the designation for a vehicle, we need not marvel at the French having adopted fiacre. Victoria, clarence, brougham, are so many proofs of the ease with which the names of persons are given to new forms of carriages.—All the Year Round.

Studies of the Ancients.

"Orpheus," remarked the envious Casca one day as he and his friends were strolling through the market where, "hard by, a butcher on the block had laid his whittle down"—"Orpheus would have made an excellent butcher, with his wonderful musical abilities."

"And why?" demanded Brutus, "because he could take the bull by the horns?"

"Not exactly," Casca replied, "but that is something like it."

"Because," suggested Cinna, "he could knock the beef flat every time?"

Casca looked disgusted.

"And do it single-handed?" suggested Decius Brutus.

Casca looked around for a brick.

"Because," said Cassius, "every time a customer wanted veal he could make calf notes?"

Casca wept silently and shook his head.

"Because he could show his thanksgiving customers how to trombone a turkey?" asked Cinna.

Casca pulled his hat down tight on his head, and looked as though he was going to kick somebody.

"I know," shouted Decius Brutus "because he could take a whole beef and cornet."

At this the envious Casca waved them all to silence. "Nay, an' you talk much more like that, I'll never look you in the face again. For mine own part it is all Greek to me. I had some foolery of mine own in thought when I began, but you have driven it out of my head. It is the part of men to hold their hush, when the mighty gods, by such conundrums, send such dreadful answers to astonish us."—Burlington Hawk-Eye.

A Novel Way of Balancing an Account.

Baron R——, one of the gravest and most decorous Judges on the Irish bench, had a younger brother singularly unlike him, who was a perpetual thorn in his side. A scapegrace at school, the youth would learn nothing, and was the torment of his teachers. Having been set a sum by one of the latter, he, after an undue delay, presented himself before the desk and held up his slate, at one corner of which appeared a pile of coppers.

"What is the meaning of all this, sir?" said the master.

"Oh!" cried the youth, "I'm very sorry, sir, but I really can't help it. All the morning I've been working at a sum. Over and over again I've tried, but in spite of all I can do it will not come right. So I've made up the difference in half-pence, and there it is on the slate."

The originality of the device disarmed the wrath of the pedagogue, and young R—— was dismissed with his coppers to his place.

Making Things Right.

A citizen in want of some flower-seeds was hunting around the market yesterday when he came upon a woman surrounded by numerous bags of seed, packages of roots and parcels of sprouts.

"Madam," he began, after a close look at her face, "two years ago I purchased some seeds of you. You told me to plant them in gravelly soil, and I did. Not a seed came up. Last year I purchased some more of you. You told me to plant them in loamy soil, which I did. Not a seed came up. Madam, what have you to say?"

She pinched out a few seeds, wrapped them up, and, as she thrust the parcel into his hand, she replied:

"I'm very sorry—plant these in a stiff clay soil!"

Thirty-one Feet of Snake.

T. O. Carter and Daniel Cleaves, of Antioch, while riding horseback in the Diable hills, near Round valley, saw a monster snake in a semi-dormant state a few feet ahead. Carter, who had a shot-gun, emptied both barrels at the head of the ser

FRIDAY, MAY 17, 1878.

THE Battle Creek Journal does n't give place to the call for a Republican State Convention. Bro. Willard has evidently enlisted under the banner of the rag-baby.

WILBUR F. STOREY, of the Chicago Times, has been indicted by the grand jury of Peoria County, Ill. Been libelling Hon. R. H. Whiting, an ex-member of Congaess.

JUDGE WHEELER, of the Nineteenth Circuit, has resigned, and will throw aside his ermine robe June 1. He prefers the office of postmaster at Ludington to a $1,500 judgeship.

AMONG the great men of the Nationals who aspire to be Governor, are named Hon. Henry Chamberlain, Hon. George Willard, and Hon. John P. Cook. Books not yet closed.

AMUSING: the reports in our Republican exchanges of the Democratic conference meeting held at the Russell House, Detroit, on Friday evening last. Guess-work and imagination run riot.

MISS CATHERINE E. BEECHER, died at the residence of her brother, Thomas K. Beecher, in Elmira, N. Y., on Sunday last. Miss Beecher was 77 years old,—the oldest of 11 children, and was a woman of great talent.

THE National or Greenback State Convention, for the nomination of candidates for State officers and the full organization of the party, is called to be held at Grand Rapids June 5. "Saleratus" Smith, the new Mayor of Grand Rapids, is considered a rising candidate for Governor.

HON. C. C. ELLSWORTH, of the Eighth Congressional district, has got enough of life at Washington and refuses to be a candidate for re-election: which does not at all displease a number of aspirents in his district,—among them Auditor-General Ely and Hon. D. W. Jerome, of Saginaw.

THE new steamer "City of Detroit," of the Detroit and Cleveland line, a composite steamer of wood and iron, made her trial trip to Cleveland on Monday last, making it in 6 hours, 6 minutes and 10 seconds, being 34 minutes and 50 seconsd better than the fastest time on record. The new steamer is pronounced a model of convenience, comfort, and safety. Capt. McKay commands, her.

THE semi-official announcement made by the Grand Rapids Democrat that "the National Greenback party of Michigan will favor no coalition with either of the old parties" is a gratifiying piece of intelligence. Those Democrats who lean to soft money or irredeemable greenbacks will now "choose their choice."

THE REPORTS of the ravages of the recent series of frosts are conflicting, but it is certain that throughout the State great injury resulted to strawberries, grapes and all small fruits, and the peach-grower is likely to be relieved of the labor of thinning his crop. Cherries are also badly damaged, but it is thought the apple crop was not materially hurt. Vegetables were severely scorched, and in some sections injury to the wheat crop is talked of.

JOSEPH HENRY, Secretary of the Smithsonian Institute and one of the most eminent of American physicists and scientists, died in Washington on Monday, May 13, aged 80 years the 17th day of last December. Mr. Henry was born in Albany, N. Y., completed his school education in Albany academy, and in 1826 was appointed professor of mathematics in that institution. His experiments in electrical science and discoveries in physics have been numerous and important, and his death leaves a vacancy in scientific circles which cannot easily be filled.

AND NOW a California judge—or rather a United States judge of a California district or circuit court—has decided that a Chinaman is not "a man and brother,"—that is that a Chinaman being neither a white man nor of African nativity or descent is not entitled to naturalization and citizenship. The full-blooded negro of the wilds of Africa—ignorant and brutal, but one degree in intelligence above the "connecting" link—can aspire to citizenship, while the door is closed against Chinese, Japanese, Arab, Turk, etc. Does n't the legislation which warrants such a decision discriminate in the wrong direction?

THE Democratic Legislature of Ohio gets no end of anathemas from Republican journalists for daring to reconstruct the Congressional districts and repeal the outrageous gerrymandering law enacted after the census of 1870. Yet these same Republicans find no word of condemnation for the Republican Legislature of New York for refusing to make a new apportionment of Senators and Representatives under the census of 1875, and pursuant to the requirements of the Constitution. Republican cutting and carving is right in both of these States and is n't to be interfered with. That is the Republican idea of equity and regard for obligations and oaths.

THE vicious system of absenteeism which has so long prevailed at Washington has been beautifully illustrated this week. The Republican members of the House determined to stave off the adoption of Potter's resolution, directing an investigation of the Florida and Louisiana frauds, or to force an amendment, have refused to vote on any direct question; and because of Democratic absentees, paired and unpaired, no result had been reached up to the close of Wednesday's session. The absentees were being called in and the "pairs" broken, if possible. By the way, the pairing system is as vicious as the absentee system, and ought to be prohibited by law.

SUPPOSE that Congress shall authorize a new issue of greenbacks in response to the demands of the irredeemable party—the Nationals—say $2,000,000,000, or a volume large enough to "meet the wants of business"—the catch-phrase of the day—how are the impecunious portion of community to get them? Will they be dealt out by the government custodians or manufacturers only in exchange for gold, silver, national bank bills or bonds, or will a bundle be expressed free to each voter throughout the land? That's the practical question for solution. Perhaps all taxation is to be abolished, and greenbacks—new, crisp and beautiful—are to be paid out to officials, contractors, and to all agents and employes of the government,—to pensioners and to meet subsidies. We wait an official declaration on the point.

THE LATE Hon. Moses W. Field, of Detroit, one of the largest of the many large land-holders of that city, is one of the blatant and noisy denouncers of the "bloated bondholder" and capitalist. He talks to the Nationals or greenbackers as though it was a crime to own government bonds or bank stock, or to loan moneys on mortgage securities. Is there any great difference between the crime os a land owner and that of a bondholder? Has a man any more right to monopolize lands, to swallow acre after acre and farm after farm, speculating on the increase in value and depriving the poor of homes, than he has to accumulate a large personal property or run up a large bank account? And are not the granger-greenbackers, the owners of broad-acred farms, in the same list of oppressors of the poor, of speculators in the blood and muscle of the "horny-handed sons of toil" (not of the Cary, Pomeroy, Trevallick type)?

THE Adrian Press a wild greenback organ, says of its rag baby pet: "Lack of intrinsic value only makes the greenback inferior because it cannot be used as an international currency. The convenience and safety of the greenback as a paper money far overbalances its inferiority in intrinsic worth, and thereby makes it far superior to gold as a currency." If it "lacks intrinsic value" and that "lack" makes it an "inferior" currency, by what process of reasoning does our cotemporary convert it into a "superior" currency. Money or currency that is not worth as much in Windsor as in Detroit, in Toronto as in Buffalo, in Montreal as in Portland, or in New York as in London, is a disgrace to the nation, a fraud and a delusion. And an irredeemable greenback currency, a currency that cannot be converted into coin at the will of the holder, that must be sold at a discount when the merchant or traveler on business or for pleasure has occasion to cross the boundary line into another country, is a currency that no honest legislator or honest citizen should favor perpetuating.

THE TRITE old proverb, "No rogue e'er felt the halter draw with good opinion of the law," is being illustrated by the Republicans of the House in the determined opposition they are making to the Potter resolution raising a special committee for the investigation of the Florida and Louisiana frauds. The pretense of extending the investigation into South Carolina, which voted for Hayes, or into Mississippi, New York, etc., is too thin to wash. Mr. Potter guaranteed the adoption of such an independent resolution, but very naturally antagonized any omnibus resolution, purposly designed to obstruct investigation.

RANDOM NOTES.

—Occasionally persons are heard talking as though a drinking man ought to be able to stop drinking without signing any pledge or tying on a bit of red ribbon. The same persons scout the idea that the moderate drinker is in any danger, and declare that they can drink or quit drinking at pleasure. They also lose no opportunity to sneer at the life-long temperance man who joins a red ribbon organization and wears its badge. A little reflection ought to teach these persons that the pledge and badge are elements of strength to the confirmed drinker who is seeking to break the chains that have bound him; that they inform the world of the resolution he has formed, and insure the countenance and aid of the best portion of community in keeping the pledge of reformation. Observation should also teach them that the ranks of the drunkard have always been recruited from the ranks of the moderate drinker, and always will be. As to the man who does n't need to stop drinking, it may be that for him to tie on a red ribbon is the one way he can reach and aid in saving some friend or neighbor or fellow citizen who looks to him as an exemplar.

—The Courier of last week made a covert and cowardly attack upon each of the four judges of the Supreme Court over the "poverty" exposed shoulders of the editor of the ARGUS. When the good Methodist brothers who sit next to Beal in church shall absorb their religious creeds and opinions from him, and in addition to making him their oracle in all political and secular matters shall commission him to bear them on HIS prayers up to the throne of grace, it will be time enough to question "by what authority" the ARGUS speaks, or to assume that it reflects the opinions of any judge or other official, for no other reason than because its editor lives "next door to Judge Cooley." Such a reason for not appealing the laboratory or any other suit would be assigned by only a fool or a knave.

—In noticing a Democratic gathering of which its reporter had somehow got wind, the Evening News of Friday last made this pleasant mention of one of our citizens: "Among others who will be present is the gallant Senator Burleigh, from the Fourth district, whose presence is expected to give super-abundant tone to the meeting. He has a certain defined notion of how the machine should be run, and will advocate the policy of capturing the greenback vote. He has strong hopes, by this scheme, to carry the State for the Democrats. The Senator, it is said, has an eye on the gubernatorial chair." On Saturday the News stated our Senator as a candidate for Congress in this district, and on Wednesday it entered him for State Treasurer. Is the News giving the genial Burleigh away?

—The remark of the late eminent Judge Grover, of the New York Court of Appeals, to a young lawyer who was bestowing his blessings upon a Court which had failed to meet his views, might well be made both to an occasional lawyer and an occasional client in this section. It was: "Young man, when I practised law a lawyer who was beaten could do one of two things. He could appeal or he could go down to the tavern and swear at the judge. It is my opinion that you can't take both remedies."

—The annual meeting of the American Social Science Association will commence at Cincinnati on the 18th inst.—Saturday next. The opening address will be given by Prof. Pierce, of Harvard, on "The National Importance of Social Science; and on Sunday Bishop Jaggar, of Cincinnati, will give a sermon on "Social Science in its Relations to Religion." On Tuesday Judge Cooley's paper on "Taxation" will be read; on Wednesday a paper will be read by Prof. Kent, of the University; and on Thursday, before the Conference of Charities, Hon. Henry W. Lord, of Detroit, will read a paper on "Dependent and Delinquent Children."

—We are indebted to Messrs. S. M. Pettengill & Co., of 37 Park Row, New York, for a copy of their Newspaper Directory and Advertisers' Hand-Book for 1878. It is conveniently arranged, compact, complete, and a most valuable book of reference both to newspaper publishers and their advertising patrons. It gives the number of newspapers and other periodicals in the United States as 8,133, classified as follows: daily, 752; tri-weekly, 61; semi-weekly, 114; weekly, 6,185; semi-monthly 111; monthly, 831; bi-monthly, 18; and quarterly, 61.

—The State Medical Society met at Lansing on Tuesday. Among the list of delegates reported in attendance were Drs. Dunster, Maclean, Herdman, and Georg, of this city; Botwell and Owen, of Ypsilanti; Hall, of Saline, and Oakley, of Mooreville. Private advices intimate that the old fogies of the Society will refuse admission to the recent graduates of the Department of Medicine and Surgery of the University, and that a new society will be organized.

—This from a Mason dispatch to the Post and Tribune under date of May 14: "A hearing in the Rose-Douglas controversy was had here last evening before Judge Huntington, to certifiy to evidence and exhibits preparatory to removing the case to the Supreme Court. Judge Douglas was here with a large mass of documents, but Rose's side failed to appear or to furnish exhibits."

—A $75 prize is to be given to the engineer on the Chicago and Lake Huron Railroad who kills the smallest number of cattle during a period of six months, and $50 to the man who slaughters the next smallest number. And now trains will (probably) come to a full stop whenever an animal is seen on the track and the train men be sent to drive it off.

—This from the Lansing Journal of May 9: "Judge Cooley has been in town some time past preparing an address to be read before the Social Science Convention to be held in Cincinnati, and also preparing matter for a legal work to be published. He keeps two clerks busy at the business."

—We welcome the Pontiac Commercial to our list of exchanges. It is a well-filled 40 column quarto, published by Messrs Chapman & Sale. We have a personal acquaintance with the latter gentleman and with his newspaper work. He will give the Oakland Democracy some sound doctrine.

—We have unintentionally omited to notice the appearance of the Lapeer Democrat in a new dress. Glad to note so evident a sign of Bro. Goulet's prosperity.

POLITICAL CLIPPINGS.

—If protection is a good principle for the country it ought to be a good principle for the State. It ought to be a good thing for Rhode Island and Massachusetts, for example, which produce similar lines of manufactured goods, to be protected against each other, and for both to be protected against the cotton mills which are rapidly springing up in Georgia. But whoever would say that States with similar industries ought to adopt State laws for self-protection would be hooted down as a monomaniac; and, in reality, no one ever thinks of such inter-state competition as injurious either to State or nation. So well recognized is the beneficence of this inter-state trade and the advantage of free exchange of the most varied productions of the country that the fathers of the Republic protected it jealously by vesting in Congress, and in Congress alone, the power of regulating it. Yet, say the protectionists, this same great principle, if expanded so as to apply to foreign intercourse, is to be resisted desperately as a fatal evil. A little benefit is good, but a great benefit of the same kind is bad. We cannot see the mountain, forsooth, but we can see distinctly the molehill at its base.—N. Y. Evening Post.

—Packard was United States Marshal during the most disgraceful period of the carpet-bag regime, and was the person who obtained the celebrated "midnight order" from the disreputable Judge Durell, and under it organized the Legislature with the aid of United States troops. In fact, there was no trick or rascality of that period in which he had not a hand. His career, then ought, in fact, to have disqualified him for any other office, but it has been felt that something must be done for him, as well as the other Southern politicians whom the President's "policy" has ruined. In Europe he will be spared the pain which Mr. William E. Chandler described as so hard for a "thoughtful man," of looking for outrages and hearing of none.—N. Y. Nation.

—Then and now: Then, McLin made Hayes President. Then, the President made McLin Chief Justice of New Mexico. Now, McLin swears that the electoral vote of Florida which made Hayes President was a fraud, and that it belonged to Tilden. Now, the President's friends denounce McLin as a knave and liar. Then, McLin was thought honest enough to negotiate with Noyes, Hayes' confidential friend. Now, it is said he is base enough to sell his soul by perjury. This is the picture painted over the entrance to the White House. How came it there? Some say Tilden's hand did it. Most people will look aliunde.—Boston Post.

—It is far to early too perceive the issues on which the contest of 1880 will be made, but it is not too early to see that Grant will not be one of them. Nothing could give him a chance except a strong conviction that he, and but he alone, could "rescue the country" from some terrible fate with which the success of his opponent threatened it. And no such conviction can be successfully cultivated, Stark madness even on the part of the Democrats could not persuade the country that Ulysses S. Grant was the only man among some forty-one millions of people who could save it. The Republicans will not elect anybody president in 1880 on the platform of indorsing the national administration from 1869 to 1877—least of all the man most responsible for its blunders. — Springfield Republican.

—The electoral conspiracy did not produce a war because it failed to reach far enough into the domain of practical concern. It abrogated no right and confiscated no estate. It was a gigantic wrong, but a wrong which left hope and chance of remedy to the party wronged, and hence, for the sake of free government and peace, the quarrel was adjourned, to be resumed at the proper time. The time will come in 1880, and, when it comes, all other issues will sink into insignificance beneath a revived sense of outrage in the minds and hearts of a majority of the American people; a fire which smoulders, but is not subdued, and which, even now, flashes up from time to time in fitful, illuminating spurts of popular indignation. — Louisville Courier-Journal.

—The work of investigation must go on. Till the inquiry is completed and all the facts obtained, the remedy for the wrong cannot be specified. But to deny that there is a remedy is to assert that our institutions are rooted in rottenness.—Utica Observer.

Mr. Blaine has now straddled; (1) The silver question; (2) the Halifax-award question; (3) the timber stealing question; (4) the tariff question; (5) the bankrupt repeal question; (6) the Pacific Railroad question. There are several questions yet to hear from, and we feel authorized to say that Mr. Blaine will straddle them severally as they approach him. He is now engaged in meeting "questions" in this manner; and unless some mishap befalls him, he will clear the entire field of economics and politics before harvest. This conduct is supposed to be prudent and statesmanlike in a Presidential candidate. We feel, however, that it is not just to the honorable State of Maine, which is entitled to have two thinking and voting members of the United States Senate.—Chicago Tribune.

—Grant poisoned the fountain of justice by packing the Supreme Court of the United States to secure the success of the legal tender job. Hayes poisons the very source of the nation's political liberty through a fraud which prostitutes the Constitution for the purpose of defeating the will of the people. —N. Y. Sun.

—It is the grand purpose of inflation—the limitless issue of irredeemable money to furnish money to those who have none now, and are unable or unwilling to get it. Practically, therefore, inflation is communism. It is a taxation of those who have for those who have not. And not alone of the wealthy, or, as they are sometimes called, the bloated bondholders. A tax of that character falls upon all who have anything to tax, upon the industrious mechanic with his little home as well as upon the capitalist. It is worth the while therefore, of those who have anything, to consider well before committing themselves to the inflation doctrine.—Free Press.

—It is now reported that Ben Butler proposes to make things lively in Massachusetts during the coming political campaign by entering the field as a candidate for Governor on the Greenback and Labor ticket, and leaving his Congressional district to the tender mercies of somebody else. If the report is well founded, the canvass in the Bay State will be the most interesting one known for years.—New Hampshire Press.

—Both political parties, if they have any hope of the maintenance of a republican form of government, have only one course of action open to them; they must meet the Communists at the outset and make no consessions in their platforms or their speeches. If they do they simply turn the grindstone to whet the knife that will be put at their own throat.—Philadelphia North American.

—Mr. Tilden was not willing to secure the Executive office at the price of civil strife and popular commotion. We may pass by the attempt to belittle the courage of the man who broke the Tweed and canal rings. The story that he was intimidated by Grant is neither true nor well invented. It is simply ridiculous.—Buffalo Courier.

—Mrs. Nancy Knight died at Jackson, May 10, aged 74. Her husband, a Christian minister, settled in Hanover in 1835.

—A woman named Wolford, living near Crockery Lake, Newaygo County, cut her own throat on the 2nd and then tried to kill another woman and dropped dead while chasing her.

—There are now thirteen patients in the prison hospital. It is a beautiful place, so high up in the building as to afford a view of most of the city.—Jackson Citizen.

—W. S. Marsh, who recently eloped with Mrs. Jennie Robinson, of Ashton, Osceola County, has been arrested, and is in jail at Frankfort, with his paramour.

—The Saginaw City Gas Company have appointed two men, the city government two more, and these four choose a fifth; then the written decision is final as to the price of gas in that city for the next five years.

—The Hon. J. J. Woodman leaves for New York and Paris next week, and will sail on the Algeria with the Illinois Commission.

—A saloon keeper at Albion, named Todd, has been fined $50 for selling liquor without giving the bonds required by statute.

—Hon. Peter White, of Marquette, recently lost three children in one week, by diphtheria: A son of 12 years, a daughter of 9, and a son of 4. He has the sympathies of a host of friends throughout the State.

—A derrick broke at the State Capitol, Lansing, on Tuesday, and let a six ton stone drop some twenty feet. One man was severely injured, and the damage to the south portico is estimated at from $2,000 to $5,000.

—A Bay City barber named Watson took an ounce and a half of laudanum on the night of May 9, and the laudanum took him off at 3 o'clock in the morning. Dissipation.

—Wm. Courtney, treasurer of school district No. 6, in Pavilion, Kalamazoo County, has been arrested on a requisition from Gov. Croswell, at Lebanon, Pa., charged with embezzling $390 belonging to the district.

—Warrants have been issued for Elmer Jones, Joseph Hill and others, in the vicinity of Bandalia, for robbing freight cars of goods. The Central Railroad have missed about 40 barrels of flour and other goods during the last winter.

—Ziba Blood, an old resident of Vevay, Ingham Co., was found dead in his field on Friday last, by the side of a log where he had apparently sat down to rest.

—The residence of T. C. Carpenter at Sturgis, St. Joseph Co., was burglarized Thursday night, May 9, and $150 cash and a gold watch and chain, amounting in all to $500, were stolen. An attempt was made at Dr. Thornton's drug store, but the operators were shot at and frightened away.

—Mayor Kergan, of Corunna, has been found guilty of an assault upon John N. Ingersoll, and fined six cents and costs.

—Ex-Mayor, O'Donnell of Jackson, has been figuring as plaintiff in a divorce case and is once more a single man.

—A farmer named Davidson, living five miles north of Constantine, lost 30 sheep by lightning one day last week.

—Mrs. Albert Beard of Roland, Isabella County, while laboring under aberration of mind, made a desperate effort to drown herself on the 2nd, throwing herself into the river, whence she was only rescued by the desperate exertions of two daughters of Mr. D. L. Moss, who happened to be with her.

—A Canadian schooner has just taken from Marquette for Quebec 20,000 cubic feet of square timber cut in Marquette County, and which will ultimately find a market in England. Another shipment will be made in July.

—In the Monroe Circuit, Gottlieb Gieger was fined $25 and costs for keeping a gaming house, and Glade Campau sent to jail three months for rape. Henry Spaulding was tried for incest and the jury failed to agree.

—The Saginaw Republican says: "Lumbermen who complain of dull times can learn the reason by consulting the agents of Eastern freight lines. From them they will learn that while the rate per car is $64 to Boston from this point, it is only $50 from Grand Rapids to Boston. Lumber can be bought as cheap at Grand Rapids as here, and $16 a car is a handsome margin for profit, and that is saved in freight alone. The extra freight paid in this city every year, for want of competition, would furnish all the funds necessary to secure the Vassar branch."

—The Grand Haven Free Press correspondent: Fruit growers say that the late frosts have not seriously injured fruit in this section. Grapes have received the greatest injury. F. Gidley, an extensive fruit grower, says that the vines will reproduce the grapes that have been frostbitten, making the injured part of the crop only a few weeks later in ripening. Only a part of the strawberry blossoms have been killed, leaving the late buds all right. The peach trees never had so many young peaches on them before. It will be necessary to thin them out in order to save the trees. Nothing like the present promise for a big crop of all kinds of fruit was ever seen here before. Potatoes, beans, tomatoes, young clover, etc., are badly injured.

—The barn of John Spaas, in the northeast corner of Freedom, was struck by lightning on the 7th inst. and burned, to gether, with farm implements, a quantity of hay, and 150 bushels of wheat. Insured in the German Farmers' Mutual.

—From May to November milch cows are given free run in Manchester streets from 6 a. m. to 8 p. m., while other cattle, horses, mules, sheep, and swine must seek other pastures green. The Manchester law-makers favor a milk diet.

—John C. Shaw has sold his house in the Sixth ward and his drays, etc., and has purchased a farm near Ithaca, Gratiot County He has made an honest coal dealer and faithful drayman, and will make a good and successful farmer.

—Luther Graham, of Salem, aged 73 years, and who has resided in that town nearly half a century, died on Saturday last from a dose of opium taken with suicidal intent. He has a son — William Graham — living on Miller avenue in this city.

—William G. Shipman, of Ypsilanti, has been drawn on the grand jury for the June term of the United States Courts, Detroit, and John J. Robison, of Sharon, on the traverse jury. The grand jurors will be wanted June 3, and the traverse jurors June 3.

—Heavy frost last Saturday morning; ditto, with thin sheets of ice on Sunday morning; a third one on Monday morning; a fourth on Tuesday morning; a fifth on Wednesday morning; and the sixth yesterday morning. Is n't the "early spring" business a little overdone?

—Being unable to agree upon the prices to be paid for the railroad right of way across certain lots in the south part of the city arbitration was agreed upon, and awards have been made as follows: To F. L. Parker, $385; to Fredk. Schmid, $175; to Mack & Schmid, $350.

—The Standard reports the organization of a Farmers' Club at the Forbes School House, near Saline Center, with the following officers: President, Ezra Sanford; Vice-President, Byron Forbes; Secretary, Irving Corbett; Treasurer, Milton Reynolds; Secretary, James H. Davison.

—The workmen who were engaged in tearing down the old Court House on Tuesday afternoon loaded the ceiling over the court room too heavy. It fell with a crash. Contractor Sweeney was knocked down, cut on the face, and badly squeezed. He had a very narrow escape.

—The track-layers on the Toledo and Ann Arbor Railroad crossed State street at noon yesterday, and at night were inside the city limits. To-day they will reach Main street. At 3 1-2 p. m. yesterday they were escorted by the band and a procession of citizens to the Opera House, and a supper served to them under the auspices of the Reform Club. In the procession was a six-horse wagon, with iron, track-laying implements, etc. Flags and bunting were thrown to the breeze from the stores along Main street. It was a gala day.

—The track of the Toledo and Ann Arbor Railroad crosses State street just one mile and a half south of Huron street, and one mile south of the southwest corner of the University grounds. From this crossing to the crossing of Main street the line measures one mile and a quarter.

—John Dillon, the celebrated comedian, is to play at the Opera House to-morrow evening, May 18, supported by a company from Wallack's, New York. Mr. Dillon has been playing this week in the Detroit Opera House, and his performances have been received with favor. We are not advised what play is to be brought out.

—The County Treasurer is out of funds to meet contingent expenses, and a special session of the Board of Supervisors will have to be held or payment of orders refused. Action should also be taken on heating apparatus, furniture, etc., etc., for the new Court House. May 27 has been fixed as the date of the special session.

—The Building Committee opened the bids for the old Court House on Monday afternoon last. There were four offers as follows: W. Exinger, $251; Wm. Burke, $275; McCormick & Sweeney, $325 and remove the safe in the Treasurer's office to any place desired; Kitson and Imus, $327.50. The proposal of McCormick & Sweeney was accepted.

—All the calves, sheep, and poultry missing over in the vicinity of Demuth Lake, near Clinton, are now charged up against that big snake, and farmers in the vicinity have frequently found their cows stripped dry. Gentle cows those, or a charm-ing snake. Where is Barnum's agent? The "greatest show on earth" is incomplete without the Bridgewater snake.

—The following new books have been received at the Ladies' Library: Their Wedding Journey, by Howells; The Bride of the Rhine, by G. E. Waring; What to Wear, by Elizabeth Stuart Phelps; What Career? by Edward Everett Hale; The Nabob, by Alphonse Daudet; Life of Thomas a Becket, by Froude; Odds and Ends, by Henry Beers; Sesamie and Lilies, by Ruskin; and Gervinus' Commentaries of Shakespeare.

—That "sea serpent" has put in his appearance again, and this time in a little sink-hole or lake of an unsounded depth, about 2 1-2 miles northeast from Clinton, in the township of Bridgewater. It is estimated by the boys who saw it to be from 50 to 60 feet long, with a head 12 inches across, and a body from 6 to 15 inches in diameter. Didn't somebody have "snakes in their boots" about the time of those estimates?

—The Young People's Club of the Unitarian Church will give an entertainment for the benefit of the Ladies' Library, in the parlors of their church this evening (May 17), commencing at 8 o'clock. It will consist of vocal and instrumental music, including songs by the Glee Club; of reading by Prof. Pettee; and of "Mother Goose" dramatized. Admission 25 cents. It is hoped there will be a large attendance. Tickets can be obtained at the bookstores and at the door.

—The house of John Sears on State street, second north of Lawrence, was burned between the hours of 6 and 7 o'clock of Tuesday morning. The fire originated from the kitchen stove pipe, Mrs. Sears having made a fire at an early hour. It was well under headway when discovered, but by the prompt action of occupants, neighbors, and firemen the furniture was mostly saved, some bedding in the upper story being burned. A student boarder got his whiskers scorched. Insured for $1,600 in the Hartford, and $1,000 on furniture, which will fully cover the loss. Mr. Sears was absent at the time.

UNIVERSITY NOTES.

—The Oracle editors were photographed by Revenaugh on Tuesday.

—Jenney, of Flint, grouped the seniors in front of the central building on Saturday last, and photographed them.

—Dr. Cocker has commenced his course of lectures on "The Evidences of Christianity." They are given at 9:30 a. m.

—A senior reception is to be held on Tuesday evening of commencement week, — with a dance under a tent on the campus.

—The junior engineers are soon to go into camp at Unadilla, 10 miles north of Chelsea. They will run a railroad, make a topographical survey of the town, and do other field work.

—Committees of the faculty of the Literary Department are making their annual visitations of the High Schools of the State which desire the admission of their graduates on diplomas.

—George P. Wanty, of this city, who graduated from the Law Department at the last commencement, is manager of the collecting department of Messrs Stuart & Sweet at Grand Rapids.

—Edward Donovan, a son of Patrick Donovan of the Fifth ward, and a graduate of both the Literary and Law Departments of the University, is going to Kansas City, Mo., to "hang out his shingle."

—On Friday afternoon last the University boys played a "practice" game of base-ball with the Three Rivers Club, the score standing 16 to 16. A "match" game was played on Saturday afternoon between the same clubs. Score: University nine, 31; Three Rivers Club, 1. We can scarcely tell which club should be dubbed the "Champions."

—Dr. Vaughan in lecturing to the medical students on alcohol, last Wednesday evening, said he did not think even the smallest amount could properly be regarded as food, for, while it stimulated digestion and imparted some force to the system, it at the same time prevented assimulation of digested food to such a degree as to leave the body much weaker. It has been proved by experiments that one can do more work without alcohol than with it. And he gave it as his opinion that one drop taken by a healthy person would be just one drop too much.

COMMON COUNCIL.—An adjourned meeting of the Council was held Monday evening. A petion was presented asking the change of the name of Grove street to Packard street, which was referred to Street Committee. Permission was granted the Ladies' Decoration Society to use the engine house in Fifth ward to hold a hop, for the benefit of the society. The invitation from the above society for the Council to attend and participate in the exercises of Memorial Day was accepted. The Street Committee reported that John Kittridge was the lowest bidder for removing the garbage from the business streets during the season, being $38; the contract was awarded to him. They also reported that bids had been received for building the brick sewer bridges ordered at last meeting, one on Miller avenue and one on Mann street, and that W. E. Walker was the lowest bidder therefor—the former for $176.30 and the latter for $259; the contracts were ordered awarded to him on giving necessary bonds. Also, that some question had arisen relative to the sufficient capacity of the brick sewer bridge ordered built across West Liberty and First streets; the committee were authorized to change size of sewer or to build frame bridge, and to receive bids and let contract for building the same. The bond of the Recorder, in the sum of $500, with Wm. Allaby and C. Eberbach as sureties, was approved and ordered deposited with the Treasurer. The General Fund Committee were intrusted with the matter of erecting a street lamp in front of the engine house in the Fifth ward. The Street Committee were authorized to employ a surveyor to determine the line of street adjoining property of Hugh McGuire and D. Hiscock, on North Main street, and the City Attorney was directed to take the necessary steps to compel the removal of fences to such established lines. The General Fund Committee made an informal report relative to the furnishing supplies and lighting the oil street lamps; that they had received several bids therefor, the lowest of which, for supplying and lighting 99 lamps, was made by E. Duffy for $950, and that after careful estimates and consideration the difference in expense would be in favor of the old method—the city buying oil and employing lighters—by some 53 cents per lamp per year. The several liquor bonds of druggists and saloon keepers presented at last meeting, together with those of John Clair, Frederika Haas, and Francis Kapp, since presented, were approved.

THE CHURCHES.

—By request, Rev. J. H. Allen, of the Unitarian Church, will repeat on Sunday evening next the lecture given December 30. Subject: "The Present and Future of Religious Thought."

—Rev. Dr. Brown, of the Presbyterian Church, has gone to Pittsburgh, as a delegate to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church. On the two Sundays he will be absent services will be held in his church in the forenoon only.

RED RIBBONS.

—R. E. Frazer will address the Mason Club next Sunday.

—The Ypsilanti Club is to be addressed next Sunday afternoon by Jerome Murray, of Toledo, and on Monday evening by Mason Long, of Fort Wayne, Ind.

—A fine framed picture was received by Capt. Beahan on Wednesday from John T. Sinclair, of Chicago. It has been placed in the club reading room.

—At the time of our going to press yesterday afternoon a large number of our citizens were preparing to leave on an excursion to Milan, over the new railroad, to attend a temperance mass meeting to be addressed by R. E. Frazer.

—A very large audience assembled in Costello's Hall, Dexter, last Sunday evening, and was addressed by Jerome Murray, of Toledo. About a dozen new signatures to the pledge were obtained. Mason Long, of Fort Wayne, Ind., speaks at the same place to-morrow (Saturday) evening.

—The meeting at the Opera House next Sunday afternoon, at 3 o'clock, will be addressed by Mason Long, of Fort Wayne, Ind. Mr. Long is a reformed gambler and ex-saloon keeper. He has related the story of his life in several places, and always succeeds in inducing large numbers to sign the pledge. Go and hear him.

—R. E. Frazer, H. C. Waldron, and the Glee Club went to Salem station on Tuesday evening and held an immense temperance meeting. 160 signatures to the pledge were obtained. Another meeting will be held at the same place next Tuesday evening, when the organization of the club will be perfected. "See the mighty host advancing."

—Last Sunday was a great day for the Clinton Club. Meetings were held both afternoon and evening, and were addressed by R. E. Frazer, Wm. Burke, and John Schumacher, of this city. 107 new members were obtained. Rev. R. B. Pope spoke at the same place Tuesday evening, and secured 55 new signatures. "See the glorious banner waving."

—The Club at Delhi Mills celebrated its first anniversary last week, by holding meetings each evening, commencing Wednesday and closing Sunday. The meetings were addressed respectively by R. E. Frazer, Rev. R. B. Pope, H. C. Waldron, Jerome Murray of Toledo, and Chas. R. Whitman of Ypsilanti. Several new members were enlisted at each meeting—the largest number was obtained on Sunday evening by Mr. Whitman, being 22.

—The good impression made upon our citizens when here a weeks since required but a mere announcement to draw together an immense audience in the Opera House last Sunday afternoon to hear Jerome Murray, of Toledo. The speech was a masterly effort, producing a visible effect on its hearers, and commanded the closest attention of the entire audience during its delivery—about an hour and a half. Mr. Murray retains the good opinion of our citizens made by his former visit and has won new laurels by his last visit, being regarded as one of the ablest, most sensible, and conservative temperance speakers in the field. Several new names were added to the pledge.

—The administration is now hard at work trying to find a satisfactory place for Simon Wolf, whom it put out of the position of Register of Deeds for the District of Columbia to make a place for George A. Sheridan, of Louisiana. The operations of the new and peculiar civil service impose very arduous duties on its manipulators.—Buffalo Express.

— The Republicans of Ohio would have no reason to apprehend the redistricting of the State by the present Democratic Legislature, if the Republicans had not outraged all decency in the apportionment of Congressional districts they made after the census of 1870. They took very special pains to see what they could do in the way of gerrymandering.—Free Press.

It is true there are yet thousands of persons who are predisposed to Throat and Lung Affections, Consumption, Hemorrhages, Asthma, Severe Colds settled on the Breast, Pneumonia, Whooping Cough, &c., who have no personal knowledge of Boschee's German Syrup. To such we would say that 50,000 dozen were sold last year without one complaint. Consumptives try just one bottle. Regular size 75 cents. Sold by all Druggists in America.

To those who Subscribed to aid in building the Toledo and Ann Arbor Railroad.

TOLEDO & ANN ARBOR RAILROAD COMPANY, }
TOLEDO, O., May 8, 1878. }

I take pleasure in announcing, that on or before the first day of June, our road will be completed from Toledo to Ann Arbor, and ready for business.

This is seven months earlier than promised. Our open winter, and the unprecedented rain fall in the months of March and April, greatly retarded our work and caused the expenses largely to exceed the estimates, so that I now need every dollar I can command.

If those whose obligations we hold "payable thirty days after the cars are regularly running," can, without serious inconvenience, pay them earlier, they will place me under additional obligations.

Those whose notes are now due [I mean the "old notes," which are payable in installments, on the laying of each eight miles of iron], are respectfully requested to pay them at their earliest convenience.

J. M. Ashley, Jr., of A. W. Hamilton, Secretary of the Company, are authorized to receive the money for both the new and the old notes, and to deliver them up on payment.

ADVICES from Texas say the band of train-robbers that has for several months been plundering the Houston and Texas Central and Pacific railroads has been broken up, and a number of the gang arrested....A son of Col. Fitzsimmons, Marshal of Georgia, acting as deputy, and pursuing a gang of illicit distillers, recently succeeded in capturing some of them armed, and, in default of evidence of the work they had undoubtedly been engaged in, he caused them to be put on trial for carrying concealed weapons, and convicted them all. Such a trial was a great novelty in that section, and the result was a matter of general surprise.

FOUR persons have died in Russell county, Va., and others are dangerously ill, from the effects of eating poisoned butter. The butter had been impregnated with the poison by a farmer's wife for the purpose of poisoning a thief who had been depredating upon her dairy, and was unwittingly sold to a dealer, and by him dealt out to his customers.

A STRANGE romance of crime is narrated in St. Louis papers. Six years ago, Julie Leblanc, daughter of a farmer in Jefferson county, Mo., mysteriously disappeared one evening, and was never again seen alive. A negro, while shooting snipe along the bank of the Mississippi river, twenty or thirty miles from the home of Leblanc, saw a stray skiff floating down the stream, and, on overhauling it, found it to contain a female skeleton, which proved to be that of the long-missing girl. The theory is that she was enticed from home by a discarded lover, strangled, and placed in the skiff, which was then securely fastened to the bank of a creek at a place where the underbrush was so thick as to effectually hide it; that there the boat remained until the ravages of time made the ropes decay, and thus the loosened boat floated down the creek and into the Mississippi river.

PROCEEDINGS IN CONGRESS.

TUESDAY, May 7.—SENATE.—Mr. Cockrell moved to take up the House bill to forbid the further retirement of United States legal-tender notes, which was read a first time yesterday, and said that he moved to take it up now, so that it might be read a second time. The motion was agreed to—yeas, 33; nays, 25. The bill having been read a second time, Mr. Morrill moved that it be referred to the Committee on Finance. Pending the discussion, the morning hour expired, and consideration of the Pension Appropriation bill was resumed. The bill, after some discussion, was read a third time and passed. ..The Indian Appropriation bill was called up and discussed.....Mr. Voorhees presented a petition of citizens of Camden, N. J., favoring the passage of a law making six hours a legal day's work for all workmen employed by the Government....The Senate, in executive session, confirmed the nomination of Sanford S. Blodgett, of New York, as Consul at Prescott, vice C. S. Sims, recalled. There was a long discussion over the nomination of D. C. Baker, Collector of Internal Revenue for the Austin (Tex.) District, but it went over without action.

HOUSE.—After three hours' discussion the House passed, without calling the yeas and nays, the bill establishing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia. The bill provides that the General Government shall pay 50 per cent. of the expenses....The House, by the close vote of 109 yeas to 108 nays, decided to take up the Wood Tariff bill, and Mr. Banks delivered a long speech in opposition thereto.

WEDNESDAY, May 8.—SENATE.—Mr. Cockrell called up the House bill to forbid the further retirement of legal-tender notes, and it was on his motion referred to the Finance Committee....Mr. Morgan submitted a concurrent resolution touching the relations of the United States with Mexico. ....The Indian Appropriation bill was discussed.

The report was adopted....The House discussed the Tariff bill and the bill to regulate inter-State commerce.

THURSDAY, May 9.—SENATE.—After the transaction of some routine business of an unimportant nature, the Senate went into secret session for the consideration of the bill for the payment of the Mexican awards of 1868, and certain alleged fraudulent claims connected therewith. The doors were thrown open, the bill read a third time and passed....The Bankrupt-Repeal bill was then taken up, and a long discussion ensued touching the date at which the repeal shall go into operation. ....The Indian Appropriation bill was passed.

HOUSE.—The House passed a joint resolution for the enforcement of the Eight-Hour law for employes in all departments of the Government....A bill was passed to restore certain lands in Iowa to settlement under the Homestead law....Peter Cooper, who was in the city on his way to South Carolina, was voted the privileges of the floor.... The Tariff bill was taken up, and Mr. Kelley, of Pennsylvania, addressed the House in opposition to the bill. Mr. Harris, of Georgia, followed in a speech advocating the measure.

FRIDAY, May 10.—SENATE.—The Senate adopted the House joint resolution assigning $30,000 of the appropriation for the completion of the Washington National Monument to strengthen the foundation of that structure, and then resumed consideration of the bill to modify or repeal the Bankrupt law. Mr. Dawes advocated fixing January 1, 1879, as the time for the repeal going into effect. Mr. Morgan made a short but spirited speech in favor of immediate repeal, and Mr. Hoar spoke in favor of the Bankrupt law and against its repeal. Sept. 1 was finally agreed upon as the date for the repeal, and the bill in that shape passed.

HOUSE.—A bill was passed providing that the notice of contest, under the Pre-emption, Homestead and Timber-Culture laws, must be printed in newspapers in the county where such contest lies....Several committee reports of a private nature were presented....A bill for the relief of Richard Heater, of Virginia, for stores and supplies taken by the United States army during the late war, led to a heated partisan discussion. The claim was finally allowed....Mr. Ourham, from the Committee on the Department of Justice, reported a bill regulating the salaries of United States District Attorneys. It fixes the salaries of such officers at from $2,000 to $5,000, except the salary of the District Attorney for the Southern District of New York, which is fixed at $10,000, and provides that the fees and perquisites heretofore received by those officers shall be covered into the treasury.

SATURDAY, May 11.—SENATE.—Not in session.

HOUSE.—The following bills were passed: To restore to the market certain lands in Utah; for the relief of settlers on public lands, providing that any person who shall plant and maintain for eight years ten acres of timber land shall be entitled to a patent for such quarter section; permitting Nebraska to cede certain territory to Missouri; providing for the sale of timber lands in California, Oregon, Washington Territory, Nevada and Colorado, in quantities not exceeding 160 acres to any one citizen, at a minimum price of $2.50 per acre, and making it unlawful to cut any timber on public lands....Mr. Wright, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill providing for the loan of $500 to every person who shall settle on the public lands under the Homestead law, the act to be in operation until $10,000,000 has been expended. The bill was reported without recommendation, and referred to the committee of the whole....The House had a long debate on Mr. Reagan's bill to regulate inter-State transportation by railroads.

MONDAY, May 13.—SENATE.—Mr. Johnston introduced a bill to levy, by the Moffatt bell-punch, a tax on liquors in all places in the District of Columbia where intoxicating liquors are sold by the drink....The Postoffice Appropriation bill was discussed, a few bills of no general interest passed, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE.—The proposed investigation into the alleged Presidential frauds was sprung upon the House by Mr. Potter, of New York. He obtained the floor and announced that he desired to submit certain resolutions, as a question of privilege. The resolutions were then read for the information of the House, all points of order being reserved. The resolutions recite the action of the Maryland Legislature in calling for an investigation; refer to McLin's confession, and allege that the so-called frauds were perpetrated with the knowledge of ex-Gov. Noyes, of Ohio, and Hon. John Sherman. The resolutions then say that these allegations ought to be inquired into, and to this end a select committee of eleven members shall be appointed to take testimony regarding the alleged fraudulent voters in Florida and Louisiana; to send for persons and papers, and to sit in those States during such investigation. Messrs. Conger, Hale and Garfield all made points of order against the resolutions being a question of privilege. The Speaker decided that the resolutions presented a question of the highest privilege, and must be received. Mr. Conger appealed from the decision....Mr. Potter moved to lay the appeal on the table, and the motion was agreed to—yeas, 128; nays, 108—a party vote, with the exception of Messrs. Fort, Mitchell and Butler, who voted with the Democrats, and Buckner and Mills, who voted with the Republicans. A general debate ensued on the resolution. Among other objections raised, Gen. Garfield insisted that the majority of the House could not authorize a committee to sit during its recess, because when the House adjourned it carried its committees with it, and the committee could only be allowed to sit during a recess by the suspension of the rules of the House. Speaker Randall ruled, on the point of allowing the Chairmen of the subcommittees to administer oaths, that it belongs with the committee itself, and not with the House. Mr. Potter called for the previous question. The Republican side of the House thereupon resorted to the parliamentary expedient of withholding their votes, so that when the question came to be tested by tellers there were only 116 ayes to 1 no—no quorum voting. So the question went over as unfinished business, the Speaker ruling that it would remain before the House until disposed of.

WASHINGTON NOTES AND NEWS.

THE President has signed the Pacific Railroad Refunding bill, compelling the Union, the Central and the Kansas Pacific roads to contribute 25 per cent. of their net earnings toward paying the interest on the Government second-mortgage bonds.

SECRETARY EVARTS has at last found a place for Bret Harte, the author. It is a commercial agency at Crefeldt, Prussia, at a salary of $3,000. This is considered as considerable of a come-down for Harte, who, a year or more ago, aspired to the Chinese mission.

THE Western Emigration Society (colored) have adopted a memorial to Congress, asking an appropriation to transport emigrants West and furnish an outfit of farming utensils, seeds, etc., for the first year or two, when, it is calculated, they will be able to support themselves.

THE President has issued a pardon for Ferd S. Winslow, of Chicago, for complicity in the treasury robbery in 1877 and sentenced to eighteen months' imprisonment in the Albany penitentiary. The pardon does not relieve Winslow of any of the time of imprisonment. It simply relieves him of his subsequent disabilities as a citizen. He was sentenced to eighteen months in February, 1877, and has gained two months' time by good behavior.

A BILL has passed the House providing for cutting timber in the mining regions of the country. It provides that timber may be cut upon the mining lands of Colorado, Nevada, Wyoming, Arizona, Utah, New Mexico, Montana, Idaho, and other mining districts, without cost, for mining, agricultural and domestic purposes, under such restrictions as may be adopted by the Secretary of the Interior, to protect the undergrowth and timber from waste.

THE Public Lands Committee of the House of Representatives recommend the passage of a bill for the payment of 5 per cent. on the minimum price of public lands located upon military land-warrants, to the States in which the lands are situated. The list of States to be benefited by the bill embraces all the Western and Southern States except those of the "original thirteen" and California.

GEN. SHERMAN proposes some very radical changes in the equipment of the regular troops. He is in favor of doing away with the bayonet, the sergeant's sword, the cartridge-box, belt-plates and knapsack, and substituting in their stead a good revolver, a leather pouch for cartridges, a knife, a rubber blanket and provision-sack. He says that the blanket will contain all the clothing necessary for a long march, and should be worn across the body from shoulder to waist.

THE Attorney General decides that a Postmaster cannot withhold from the mails letters suspected to contain advertisements of lotteries, for the reason that, under the Revised Statutes, except in case of letters on which the postage has not been prepaid, there is no power conferred on a Postmaster to withhold letters from the mails. He further states, if the Postmaster General is satisfied by the evidence that any person is conducting any fraudulent lottery through the mails, he may instruct the Postmaster at any office at which the registered letters arrive directed to any such person to return the letters to the postoffice at which they were mailed.

A RECENT Washington telegram says the Philadelphia contractors for the South American railroad are unsuccessful in endeavoring to secure colored laborers about the capital, from the fear of the colored men that they will be sold into slavery, the Brazilian Minister having been called upon by the colored men, and stated that, although slavery has not been fully abolished in Brazil, it is in process of abolition by gradual emancipation, which will make the country free in twenty-one years. There is a law in Brazil prohibiting colored men from settling in that country, and they can only be taken in by contract under a special act.

THE House was honored, the other day, by the presence of the venerable Peter Cooper. The old gentleman visited the Capitol, says a correspondent, and occupied the Clerk's office in state until a resolution was adopted according him the privileges of the floor. He did not have to wait long, and the aged Greenbacker was escorted to a seat in the area in front of the Speaker just as Mr. Kelley arose to make his tariff speech. Peter turned in his chair, faced Kelley, and kept this position throughout the long speech which followed. Peter Cooper in general appearance very much resembles the patriarchs of old. He was treated very reverentially by members of the House.

THE Senate and House Committees on the Electoral Count held a conference meeting one day last week. The Senate Committee, telegraphs a Washington correspondent, does not seem disposed to favor a constitutional amendment that will favor a law regulating the subject. A statutory rule governing Congress in ascertaining and declaring the electoral vote will probably be agreed upon by both committees. The House Committee will, however, report an amendment to the constitution, making a radical change in the whole system of electing the President and Vice President. They will at the same time favor a statutory rule designating the method of declaring the result of the election, this law to be enforced pending the ratification of the amendment by the States.

AT the close of 1875-6 English cities and towns owed for local debt nearly $500,000,000. By 1877 it had increased more than 5 per cent.; by the close of 1878 it was estimated that it would reach 6 per cent. more, and a bill now before Parliament provides for a further increase of $34,000,000. Since 1873 the ratable value of England has increased from £109,200,000 to £124,500,000.

THE death of another explorer in East Africa is announced. Capt. Elton, who was accompanied by Mr. Cotterill, has died of sunstroke in Ugogo. He was engaged surveying the country between the upper end of Lake Nyassa and the Indian ocean, and had traversed sections most interesting in themselves and new to geography.

CAMERON-SHERMAN.

Cleveland's Gorgeous Wedding—The Bride, the Groom, the Toilets, and the Presents.

[Condensed from the Cleveland papers.]

The Bride.—Miss Elizabeth Bancroft Sherman, the bride, is the youngest of the four daughters of Judge Charles T. Sherman, and the niece of Gen. W. T. Sherman, and the Hon. John Sherman, Secretary of the Treasury. She is remarkable for her personal charms and beauty. Born in 1858, she is just now verging upon the threshold of 20. All the sisters are remarkable for their graces of person and manners. The eldest daughter is Mrs. Gen. Miles, and is with that brave Indian fighter upon the frontier. Miss Sherman is a lady who would be selected as one among a thousand by a painter or poet. She is of a delicate blonde complexion, with blue eyes, tall, graceful figure, small though well-shaped head, crowned with a beautiful growth of brown hair. Her features are all regular, and the expression upon her whole face is peculiarly refined and pleasing.

The Groom.—Senator Don Cameron, the groom, is quite well known to the public, but a personal description may not be out of place. He is the son of the Hon. Simon Cameron, and was born in 1833. This would make him twenty-five years the senior of the bride. Until comparatively recently he was solely occupied with great business and railroad enterprises in his own State. He was appointed Secretary of War by Gen. Grant, just after the disgraceful Belknap disclosures, and his executive abilities were displayed to the best advantage. He came to the office of United States Senator to fill out his father's term of office, which expires in 1879. In personal appearance Senator Cameron is of middle height, has a fine head covered with an abundant growth of dark hair, wears a light mustache, and does not appear a day over 35 years of age. He is said to be naturally of a retiring disposition, but is ever courteous and attractive in manners. He is said to be very warmly liked by those who know him intimately, and, like his father, never forgets a friend.

The Toilets.—The bride was attired in a robe of rich, white silk, cut with low waist and short sleeves. The train, which was long, fell plainly in elegant folds from her waist. On the front and sides the dress was finished at the bottom with a box-pleating of silk, and covered with elegant point lace. Following the diagonal lines of the lace, a garland of white lilacs and orange blossoms fell gracefully across the front, while another extended around the bottom above the pleating. Her hair was simply dressed, and the coiffure was outlined by the closely-drawn folds of a white tulle veil held in position by orange blossoms and falling to the bottom of the train. In front, however, the veil was quite short to allow free movements of the hand when necessary during the service. The bridesmaids wore similar dresses of white organdy, with the exception that their trains were not so long, nor their sleeves so short as the dress of the bride. The drapery and corsage which they wore was very different in style from those of the bride. The only color discernable about the dresses of all were the beautiful bouquets of pink and crimson which they held in their hands. Many other ladies were very tastily and elegantly dressed. The groom wore the regulation black. The General of the Army, and various subordinate officers who were present, were dressed in full uniform, and presented a showy appearance.

The Presents.—The total value of the presents is estimated at $100,000. Among the more valuable were: Necklace and bracelets, worth $5,000, from the happy groom; diamond ear-rings and breastpin, from Gen. Sherman and wife; a check for $3,000 from Secretary Sherman; a silver tea-set, from Hon. Simon Cameron; a gold horseshoe, set with diamonds, "from one of the Senator's warm friends;" silverware of considerable value, from the Hon. Wayne McVeagh; card-cases, silverware, silk table-cover of fine Japanese texture, etc., from the bridesmaids; a costly writing-desk, from Henry Sherman.

Shall We Become a Nation of Spectacle-Wearers?

The time is not many generations distant, if we may credit the theory of many oculists that near-sightedness is hereditary, when babies will be born with spectacles astride their innocent noses, only to be cast aside in the decline of life, when our grand-parents were wont to begin wearing them. Some interesting facts concerning the cause and prevalence of myopia were lately given in a paper read by Dr. Edward G. Loring before the County Medical Society of New York. Of 2,000 pupils carefully examined in the New York schools, 13 per cent. were found, at 6 and 7 years of age, to have defective vision, while the proportion at 20 and 21 years had increased to nearly 40 per cent. The Germans are particularly noted as a nation of spectacle-wearers, and no less than 62 per cent. of the German children who pass through the public schools have their eyes affected by the process. In America Dr. Loring thinks the percentage of myopic variation up to the time of puberty is greater even than in Germany. And this alarming increase of weak eyesight is largely owing to our compulsory educational system. The eyes are particularly susceptible to injury in the period of rapid development between the tenth and fifteenth years, when children are first undergoing the stress of earnest study at school. Later on, if myopia has not already set in, the eyes become more hardened, so to speak, and capable of severer use. To overcome this national tendency to near-sightedness, it is suggested that school children shall have the burden of study lightened during their more plastic years, repairing what may be thus lost by severer application after the beginning of the sixteenth year. It is observed that the English adhere more closely to this plan than other nations, and that consequently as a people they are comparatively free from the spectacle plague.

Why a Schoolmaster Left Town.

A Virginia City man, says the Chronicle, who formerly taught school in Honey Lake valley, has been telling Dan De Quille why he left that rural region. While employed as a teacher, it seems he "boarded around," and one night, while at the house of an old ranchman, gave one of his boys some extra instructions in geography. The old man overheard him telling the boy that the earth turned around once in twenty-four hours, and "kicked" against it. He said he had heard such stuff talked, but there was nothing in it, as he could prove. He filled a tin cup with water, and set it on the top of his gate-post, saying:

"Now, young feller, if the world flops over, as you say, the water will be all out of that cup in the morning, and you will be right; if the water is still in the cup, I'll be right, and the world don't flop over."

The water was found in the cup, and the old man triumphantly exclaimed:

"Thar, give me common sense any time against book-larnin'."

Word went forth in the neighborhood that the teacher was an ignoramus, and he was invited to take a walk. A reporter asked the teacher if that was the only reason the farmers had for bouncing him. He said it wasn't—that he had incurred the deadly hostility of one of the school trustees by laughing uproariously at a question put by the old man. The honest farmer had got hold of his son's geography, it appears, and there had read that the earth had rotatory motion. He called on the schoolmaster next day to ease his mind in regard to an agricultural problem which this had suggested.

"Say, profess," he remarked, "I've bin a readin' in Tom's joggerafy that the yearth hez got a rot-tatery motion, and I thought I'd jest ax you ef maybe that wasn't the cause of the pertaty rot?"

EXPLOSIONS IN FLOUR MILLS.

The Minneapolis Calamity—A Warning to Millers.

The Chicago Tribune, commenting upon the explosion in the Washburn mill at Minneapolis, which entailed such a distressing loss of life and property, says:

"It is evident at the outset that steam was not the cause, not only because there were only twenty pounds of steam on at the time and the boiler-house was some little distance from the mill, but also because steam could not have worked such terrible ruin. The same very good reason conclusively proves it was not an explosion of the gas used to illuminate the mill. Gunpowder even would have failed to work such a wide-spread disaster. It may be doubted whether any other known explosive force than the gas which actually caused it, except nitro-glycerine, could have accomplished this ruin. The dispatches vaguely intimate that the explosion was caused by gases generated in the patent middlings-purifier process, but investigations of similar catastrophes in Europe show very clearly the cause in this case. Explosions of this kind have happened in Germany, but the attention of scientific men and chemists was not immediately directed to the subject until the fearful explosions occurred at the Tradeston Mills, Glasgow, Scotland, in 1872, and at the City Mills, Port Dundas, Scotland, four years ago. It had been hitherto deemed impossible that explosions could ever occur in such a peaceful establishment as a flour mill, but the two explosions above noticed enlisted the attention of both the English and the German chemists, and they set about investigating them. The substance of these opinions is to the effect that the constituents of flour are combustible, and when diffused through the air burn with great rapidity and with explosive force. Dr. Smith, an English chemist, has shown that flour in a fine state of division gives off a gas, which, when mixed with nine volumes of air, forms an explosive mixture which is liable at any time to be fired by a spark or flame; and Weibe, a German chemist, states that flour in the form of impalpable powder quickly ignites and gives off a highly-explosive hydrocarbon gas, which, when mixed with air, explodes with terrific force. The experiments tried upon a small scale with flour-powder satisfactorily account for the Minneapolis explosion. The huge mill must have been filled with this impalpable dust, which, taking fire from the gas jets, or it may have been from the electricity which is rapidly generated and held by the mill-stones, exploded with the terrible results that have already been chronicled. With such possibilities of explosion existing in every flouring-mill, it certainly behooves mill-owners to be on their constant guard. The recent fearful disaster to the confectionery establishment in New York, which arose from an analogous cause, and the catastrophe at Minneapolis, are terrible warnings to flouring-mill owners. So long as these conditions exist no mill is safe, and it ought to be their first duty to ascertain from scientific men the precautions that will lessen, if not altogether obviate, the danger to which they are exposed."

China and Japan.

By the arrival of the steamer Gaelic at San Francisco, we get the following news from China and Japan:

The city of Canton had been visited by a great tornado. Thousands of houses were destroyed or seriously injured by the wind and an enormous waterspout from the river which broke over the city. Many lives were lost. The foreign settlement suffered severely. In the midst of the confusion four fires broke out, supposed to be incendiary, as many robberies followed. The latest advices report 500 Chinese killed. No foreigners were seriously hurt.

The Western Chinese army, under Gen. Tso, is overrunning Kashgaria, and annihilating all the inhabitants, including women and children. Multitudes of fugitives are flying for protection to the Russian outposts, more than can be provided for. Famine and distress continue, and enormous tracts are desolated by the long drought, the ground not having been watered for years past.

The Assembly of Provincial Officials of Japan was opened the 10th of April by the Mikado, who has since attended several sessions. The annual meetings of this body were intended to gradually prepare the way for popular representation on a larger scale. This year it will provide for small local parliaments to be elected by general vote. A National Legislature is not expected for a considerable time to come.

The extraordinary decision of the British court admitting opium into Japan still excites discussion. Foreign envoys generally regard it as a violation of the treaty on the part of the British authorities.

Iron Trade.

The future of the iron interest in the great industrial nations is very cloudy. Nearly all civilized states have built as much railroad as they could borrow money to do, and have substituted steel rails for iron, so that there is not the constant call to replenish the tracks. The decline of iron-making has affected the coal interest. In England the miners only make $1.25 a week, or 21 cents a day, counting the idle days. The poor-houses are besieged there, and thousands would come to America if they could pay passage. The richest mining district in Wales gives only two days' work a week, and there is an average loss of 15 cents on every ton of coal they sell, while the railroads are blocked up with coal trains which cannot sell their contents. In the county of York, celebrated for its iron, $40,000,000 are invested in iron-works, whose shares used to be above par; they are now down to 60 or 70. English steel has come down in five years to one-third of its old value. The Germans, who labor cheap, take the English and Scotch raw metal and make the difference by manufacturing it. The English iron-works derived much business from iron ship-building, particularly after the Suez canal was opened, but there are few more iron ships to build. Meantime Australia has gone into the iron business on a great scale, and will ultimately supply India, China and the surrounding countries with the iron which has heretofore come from England.—Gath's letter to Cincinnati Enquirer.

Erzeroum a Vast Charnel House.

Erzeroum, in the recent war, seems to have been a vast charnel house. During the past three months 9,500 Turkish soldiers have died in the various hospitals there, and probably as many civilians, making a total mortality of nearly 20,000 in Erzeroum alone in about twelve weeks. In January, the weather being then very severe, a detachment of 800 troops was sent over the mountains to Erzingham. Only 300 reached their destination. They were overtaken by a fearful snow-storm. The Colonel had his wife and three children with him in a covered araba; he and they all perished. The hospitals at Erzeroum are full of cases of frost-bite, some of them as severe as any cases on record. Twenty-seven soldiers without feet are under the charge of one surgeon alone; they had all been frost-bitten, and their feet had to be amputated.—London letter.

DEATH AT SEA.

How Soldiers Fear It—A Sad Scene.

[From the Boston Commercial Bulletin.]

Soldiers die bravely on the battle-field, and resignedly in the military hospital on shore, but there is something very sad in a soldier's death at sea. The surroundings of the ship-hospital are unfamiliar to his eye; the roll of the vessel is painful to him, and the thought is ever present to his mind that if he was on shore, if he could see the green fields, or even the snow-clad earth, his recovery might be possible. Although nothing could be more comfortable than the couch on which he lies, and scarcely anything more soothing than the gentle roll of the vessel to one in his condition, he longs to stretch his limbs on the barrack hospital bed, and to feel that he is on the firm ground.

Then the thought of the lonely burial in the wide waste of waters obtrudes itself upon his mind. To be launched over the vessel's side into the lonely ocean, committed to the deep, and left without a stone or wooden cross to mark the spot where his mortal remains were consigned to their everlasting rest, all this is inexpressibly saddening to the dying soldier. On shore, his comrades would have followed his remains to their resting place in the church-yard, and fired a farewell shot over his grave, and, with reluctant step, have left him to sleep the sleep that knows no waking till the trump of the archangel summons the dead to judgment.

How different at sea! Sewed up in a hammock, the corps to which he belongs summoned to the gangway-slip, a few short but solemn prayers said over the dead, and then the awful words:

"We commit this body to the deep!"

A plunge, and the corpse sinks into the sea; the flag is lowered; the vessel sails on, and the dead is left alone to the tossing of the angry waves, or to sink deep into the coral caves of the ocean. No comrade may come in after days and drop a tear over that grave; no loving hand may come and plant a flower there; it is lost; swallowed up in the immensity of the great graveyard of the deep.

The writer has stood by the side of a dying comrade in the hospital of a troop-ship, and heard the dying give utterance to such thoughts as the above.

"What does the surgeon say?" he asked. "Tell me the truth, comrade. I am not afraid of death."

"It is better that you should know the truth. He has no hope."

"I thought so. Well, God's will be done; but is hard to die in the middle of the ocean. If I had been on shore, even in a foreign country, it would have been easier. It is hard to be buried at sea."

"The sea will give up its dead."

"Ay, that is right, comrade. I ought to think of that. Seamen, they say, like to cherish the thought that they will be buried at sea; but I am a soldier. I would die happier if I knew that I would be buried on shore and be followed to the grave by my comrades. There is something beautiful in a soldier's funeral on shore. The solemn music—that Dead March in Saul—how I used to love it! My poor mother! It will grieve her to think that I was buried at sea. Read that, comrade, about the sea giving up its dead."

The chaplain at this moment approached, having been sent by the surgeon. He read the passage of scripture asked for, and many other beautiful passages.

The dying soldier closed his eyes during the reading. He lay silent for a long time after the chaplain had ceased. Then he opened his eyes and muttered, feebly:

"No funeral parade; no music; no farewell shot over my grave—committed to the deep. The—sea—will—give—up its—dead. Comrades—my mother—farewell!"

And he ceased to live.

Next day the vessel came to a stop for a few minutes. The ship's bell was tolled, the flag floated at half-mast, and the soldiers of the corps to which the deceased belonged were paraded at the gangway. The prayers were said, the body launched over the side, and the vessel resumed her course. Some of the members of the other corps on board were surprised on learning, late that evening, that a soldier had been buried during the day.

It is better that such things should be so. Nothing can be gained by saddening men unnecessarily. Cheerfulness is one of the most potent of sanitary agents. Every care should be taken to maintain it among large bodies of men.

Distinguished Women.

History abounds in narratives of women who have distinguished themselves in every vocation of life. They have attained the highest reach of knowledge, and have accomplished the most daring feats of valor. Is it a question of intellect? Let Hypatia, who was the most successful teacher in the school of Alexandria in its palmiest days, who was the grertest philosopher of her age, who was the most eloquent orator among many rivals, who was far more learned than the profoundest of her erudite contemporaries—let Hypatia answer. But not Hypatia only, for there have been many as able and learned as she. Was not Clotilda Tambroni, even in this century, Professor of Greek at Bologna, and the ablest Hellenist in Italy? Dr. Johnson told them that Mrs. Elizabeth Carter was the best Greek scholar in England. Madame Dacier rivaled the most learned scholars of her time. Caroline Herschel assisted her brother William in his astronomical labors, made for him some of his most laborious calculations, and enriched science with many valuable contributions. Had not Mrs. Somerville also acquired eminent distinction in the same abstruse and difficult study? The unfortunate and erring Madame de Chatelet translated the "Principia" into French, and was not less learned than she was elegant. Anna Maria Schuman spoke Latin, Greek, Hebrew, and the chief modern languages, was well versed in
