JUDGE KINNE DECIDES HE HAS NO JURISDICTION.

The Arguments and the Text of the Judge's Decision-The Topic of the Week on Every Tongue.

Unexampled interest has been felt in the injunction case before Judge Kinne this week. The court room has been crowded, many standing for hours to listen to dry legal arguments of the attorneys. The case came up for argument Tuesday night, Sawyer & Knowlton appearing for the local option committee, and C. R. Whitman and J. F. Lawrence for Mr Hardinghaus.

Mr. Knowlton,in beginning the argument. said, in his view, it was wholly immaterial whether the local option law was constitutional or not; the court has no authority to determine that point. In this law prohibition is made contingent, in the Orchaid Lake case on which the complainant would rely, the set itself was prohibiting. This law is have no power to say whether a law ment. said, in his view, it was wholly has no authority to determine that point. In this law prohibition is made contingent, in the Orchard Lake case on act itself was prohibiting. This law is an act to regulate the sale of intoxicating lighters in that under the set the an act to regulate the sale of intoxicating liquors, in that under the act the sale may be prohibited or licensed.

He cited a Georgia case where a charter made conditional upon the vote sustained. He also cited a case sustaining the local option law of Georgia, where he claimed the same objections to its constitutionality as was urged in general laws of the state as to that

He thought a court of equity, would not attempt to settle a this injunction was to enjoin a step disputed question of law. No court of would disjuic to the property and that law has ever questioned the constitu-tionality of this law, and this, a court of tionality of this law, and this, a court of equity, is asked to step in and decide upon the constitutionality of the law. Before granting an injunction the court should determine the relative convenience and inconveniences of the parties. His business is not immediately endangered. The election may be beneficial to the complainant and until the act is adopted his business is in no dauger. On the other hand, ne thought the right of the property of the state had construed that this did for great the constitutional law not worth the paper it is printed upon. struction of the words "to regulate" would include the power "to prohibit."
The constitution of the United States is one of enumerated powers, but a state law is presumably (valid unless prohibited by the constitution. In the constitution of Michigan, the whole legisstitution of Michigan, the whole legislative power is conferred on the legislature. By another section of the constitution it is provided that the legislative powers may be delegated to boards of supervisors, cities and villages, but nowhere is the power delegated to the people of a county. The legislature cannot delegate legislative powers to the people of the state much less to the people of the county. There is no organization known as a county recognized in the constitution. The people of a county are just the same as the people of a state. Now, if a law which undertakes to delegate to the people of a state a legislative power is unconsti-a state a legislative power is unconstitutional, that same law is unconstitutional which undertakes to delegate such powers to the people of a county. He cited an early Michigan case to show option laws is there a clause suspending all other laws, and in this local option law the last clause provides that the existing general liquor law shall be superceded or suspended. The determining of the electors' qualification are made judicial but the calling of an election is a ministerial duty. We do not ask that the clerk be enjoined from counting the number of names ed from counting the number of names on the petition. In the Georgia cases cited, it was a judicial act that was sought to be enjoined and on this point the courts refused to interfere with the law. Each of the cases cited by Mr. Knowlton were taken up and the distinction between that case and this were pointed out. Mr. Whitman claimed that each of the cases where an injunction was not greated was more injunction was not granted was upon the ground that the counting of the votes or some judicial act was sought to be enjoined. If this election call be issued, there is an immediate financial injury to the complainant, the lesseninjury to the complanant, the lessening of the mercantile value of his property. A court of equity seeks to get at absolute justice. It seeks to avoid matters of form and get at the substance. If the law is unconstitutional, then there is no one who can desire the election. The Orchard Lake case is recognized by the legal talent of the state as controlling in cases of this the state as controlling in cases of this kind and this decides that, "to regulate" is not "to prohibit." It is the interest of good government not to proceed in a single step towards the performance of the step to the step in the step of the ste formance of the acts of the statute, if that statute be absolutely void and unthat statute be absolutely void and unconstitutional.

Hon. A. J. Sawyer thought there were but two questions in the case. First, whether it is material whether this statute is constitutional or not. We believe it is utterly immaterial whether this statute is unconstitutional. The court of chancery has no right to decide whether a low is constitutional. right to decide whether a law is con-stitutional or not before the law is put in force. No court has ever yet undertaken to construe whether or not a law in the breast of a legislator is constitutional. If you can impede the right of the people to vote on one question, you may do it on another. As well could the court prohibit a presidential or any other election. The people have a right to vote upon it, whether it is constitutional or approximation of the court of the stitutional or unconstitutional. To show that the body of the local option law was a regulation, he argued that if only colored men were allowed to sell liquor and white men were prohibited, the act would be regulation. This law permits in Washtenaw, one regulation. in Livingston, if it votes the other way, another regulation. If the law is adopted there are certain men, druggists and pharmacists who are per mitted to sell liquor. Is this prohi-bition or regulation?

If this statute is criminal in its nature, if it places a man in jail, the courts of equity will stear clear of such a law and text books were cited to show that courts of equity would not interfere with criminal or quast criminal laws. The damages on account of which the injunction is asked, is the same as that for which an injunction might be asked against the ministers for getting up a revival which might injure the sale of liquor. The people haven't left it to the people of the county, whether or not a certain law is repealed. It is adopted in accordance with the present law.

He produced the poll list of the first

He produced the poll list of the first ward to show that the voters of that ward in which the court voted had this point several cases were cited. He thought the complainant has an adequate remedy at law. If an attempt is made to enforce the law after it is adopted, he can raise all the constitutional objections that he can now, and hence no injunction should now be issued. Mr. Knowlton claimed that the court was without intisdiction. He is there was no existing or general law to be repealed by the local election as in this case. The same distinction was made in the other cases cited by Mr. Knowlton law is a revision of the general liquor law of the state. There has been for some years an existing law covering this case. It is very clear that if the local option law should be put into force and option law should be repealed by the local election as in which the court voted had ward in which the court voted had ward in which the court ward in which the court ward in which the court voted had ward in which the court voted had ward in which the court voted had ward in which the court voted had ward in which the court voted had ward in which the court voted had ward in which the court ward this court was without jurisdiction. The court re-assembled Wednesday night, when Judge Kinne denied the injunction. The full text of his opinion is as follows:

The complainant in this cause is a resident of this county and under the laws of this state has been permitted to become invested with large property interests. Both he and his property, under the laws of this state, are entitled to the same recognition and the same protection as if he were a tiller of the soil or a merchant prince and he is naturally and rightfully as sensative to any encroachment or invasion of those rights as any other person and no court upon grounds of public opinion or agitation should hesitate to accord to him the full complement of his legal and equitable rights.

problem is here presented: Does the complainant by his bill of complaint make such a showing as entitles him to the relief asked?

The complainant alleges that he is the owner of a large and valuable brewery; that the defendant, who is the county clerk of Washtenaw county, is about to issue a call for an election by the electors of Washtenaw county to 1887 of the state of Michigan, to determine whether or not intoxicating liquors shall be manufactured or sold within the county of Washtenaw.

The complainant alleges that the petition filed with the county clerk upon which it is supposed he is about of this county, I submit what possible object could be subserved by the election. initials.

He turther alleges that if a majority of the electors of this county at the impending election should vote against the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, it would result in his absolute financial ruin. He further asks for an injunction of this court restraining the county clerk from calling such an election.

It has been said, and we think truly, that an injunction being the strong arm of equity should never be granted except in a clear case of irreparable injury and with a full conviction on the part of thecourt of its urgent necessity. Whether the objections made to the petitions are tenable or not become unimportant on this hearing for the reason that the legislature has lodged with the county clerk the authority to determine their sufficiency and this court cannot on this motion review his action.

The relief therefore asked by the complainant involves not only the granting of an injunction but a judicial determination that this act of the legislature is unconstitutional and void.

The legislature and judiciary are coordinate branches of our state government and the court cannot proceed with too much caution, when it is asked to nullify the laws of the state, nor in my opinion should this be done unless the case is free from doubt. The law itself may be oppressive, unpopular and may be deemed unwise and even a public calamity, yet these considerations would not authorize this court to declare the law unconstitu-

If the position of the complainant in respect to the unconstitutionality of this law'is correct and sound and for the purposes of this hearing, I may assume it so to be' then the apprehensions of the complainant are groundless for the election could work him no irreparable Courts of equity do not interfere where there is an adequate remedy at law. In the case at bar, the legal redress is open and complete.

The law may never become operative in the County of Washtenaw, but if it should, yet, if as complainant alleges; it is void and a nullity, the laws of this state afford him an ample protection.

Again, the relief asked for in this case is of an unusual and extraordinary nature. It is alleged that the people of this county are about to exercise the inalienable right of freemen; the right of elective franchise, an indispensible element in American liberty, and the complainant asks that this election of the people by the people and for the people, be restrained and pro-

It seems to me that such a request must strike every reflecting mind as a remarkable and dangerous demand The assumption of such a power by a court of chancery, would be a most He singular and pernicious prerogative. It is a direct assault upon the legislative and political power of the land.

It has been well said, that if courts can dictate to the officers of the people, that they shall not hold an election, from fear of some real or imaginary wrong, then the people and officers are entirely subservient to the courts, and the consequences are too fearful to contemplate.

Such a principle would imperil every election, and furnish the most wholesale provisions for obstructing the operations of our government. It would place the state at the very verge of political chaos, and make it the mere pensioner of a judge's mandate. Such an idea cannot be tolerated.

The power to hold an election is political and not judicial, and a court of equity has no power to restrain an officer from the exercise of such power.

This court has no jurisdiction of the matter alleged in the bill of complaint. This is not the forum for the trial of such grievances. Such questions, if they arise, must be determined in a legal forum, and are foreign to the well defined jurisdiction of equity.

I may be allowed to remark that personally, I am, to say, the least, conservative upon the questions involved and discussed on this hearing. I think the financial situation of the complainant appeals strongly to the sympathy of every rational and unprejudiced mind, but this injunction cannot be granted. without violence to the conscience of the court, and the well, settled principles of equity jurisprudence.

It is, therefore, my conclusion that the writ must be denied, and the order to show cause discharged.

AT WASHINGTON.

Saginaw, spending her vacation Working Order and Settling Down to Business-A Summary of the Most Important Bills and Resolutions Introduced During the Week and Action Thereon.

WASHINGTON CITY, Jan. 19.—The first interesting tea social at the residence business of the senate Wednesday was the of Mrs. H. A. Vincent, Wednesday passage of a bill reducing the fee for a passfternoon.

Leap year parties are quite in jects, among them Farwell's bill to perpetuate the national banking system, which it is proposed to do by issuing S per cent, bonds to run fifty years in exchange for those now held by the banks, paying the premium on the latter, and allowing circulation to issue to the full amount of the par value of the former. The bill also authorizes the treasury to buy bonds with the surplus in the open market. The bill to refund the direct tax to the states was then taken up and passed-48 to 10-and then Brown of Georgia and Blair continued the debate on the educational bill, both speaking in favor thereof. The senate then

> Cox announced to the house that Speaker Carlisle was rapidly recovering, and would soon resume the gavel. A resolution was adopted calling on the secretary of the interior for information as to what legislation is needed to protect the forests at the head of navigable waters. Plumb offered a resolution appointing a committee to investigate the refunding legislation with the object of ascertaining if the government can pay the bonded debt at its pleasure. He wanted it considered at once, but objection was made, The majority report on the Carlisle case was presented. It was ordered that 10,000 extra copies of the president's Pacific railways message be printed. The appropriation for agricultural experiment stations was passed, Wilkins called up his banking bill, but Weaver and others filibustered until an ad-journment was forced.

WASHINGTON CITY, Jan. 21.-The house Friday received and referred a petition from the National Board of Trade convention favoring liberal appropriations for waterway improvements. Springer made a personal house to get a good square meal explanation regarding a statement by Kelly Thursday, and denied the imputation that he had claimed a fee of $10,000 for inserting a clause in the bill appropriatdulged in a sleighing party, Friday ing money to the Philadelphia centennial, by which the money was returned to the power all booked as if they had the government in the case and afterward enjoyed themselves, when they re-turned home at six o'clock, Satur-value of his services, but his request had not been acted upon by congress. The Thobe Carlisle case was then taken up and after Thobe bad addressed the house Mrs. Blinn, Friday, was quite a in his own behalf the resolutions of the majority of the elections committee, declaring against reopening the case, were voted on, The Republicans, with the exception of a manner. Proceeds amounted to few who voted aye, and Brumm, Hovey, and eight dollars and fifty cents which Ladlaw, who voted nay, refrained from voting on the ground that they were not sufficiently informed on the subject. The vote was ayes, 140; nays, 3—no quorum. The house then adjourned.

WASHINGTON CITY, Jan. 23. - The house held a short session Saturday. The Thobe-Carlisle election case was again called up and Hogg of West Virginia moved to reconsider the vote by which the reopening of the matter was defeated Friday. The speaker pro tem permitted the motion, but afterward reversed his ruling, declaring that he had made a mistake as it was out of order until the previous question on the majority resolutions was disposed of. An objection was made to unanimous consent to offer a resolution to reopen, and then a vote was taken on declaring Carlisle entitled to his seat, the vote was yeas, 140; nays, 6-no quorum, and Crisp then, in view of the fact that there was not a quorum voting, moved to adjourn, which was carried-139 to 123-a strict party vote.

WASHINGTON CITY, Jan. 24.—The senate Monday referred the memorial of the governor of Massachusetts and other prominent and representative citizens of that state urging a hearty welcome to the British peace proposals, to the foreign relations committee. The resolution providing for an investigation of the alleged suppression of the negro vote at Jackson, Miss., was adopted without opposition. Chandler introduced resolutions asking the navy department for information as to the plans for naval vessels, the contracts for ordnance, armor, etc. Frye made an elaborate speech on the tariff, declaring that the president's message meant free trade, which was really the position of the Democracy on that issue. Blair spoke for nearly an hour in favor of the educa-tional bill, and when he concluded the senate went into executive session, ratified the shipping treaty with Guatamela, and when the doors reopened, adjourned.

After some discussion with reference to the correction of the house journal Monday Brumm wanted to speak to a question of privilege, stating that Crisp in an interview Sunday had reflected on the Republicans of the house regarding their action in the Thobe-Carlisle case. The speaker decided that no question of privilege was presented. The Thobe-Carlisle case then came up on the resolution to declare the latter entitled to his seat, and it was adopted-yeas, 164; nays, 7. The mass of Republicans did not vote, the only ones being Cannon, Cooper, Davenport McKenna, Post, and Steele, who voted in the affirmative, and Baker of Illinois, Brewer, Buchanan, Cheadle, Hovey, Kerr and Laidlaw in the negative. A number of bills were introduced, among them the fol-lowing: For the construction of the Illinois Mississippi Rivers canal; placing salt used for curing pork on the same tax footing as that used for curing fish; appropriating $100,000 for statues to Logan Shields; for the speedy settlement of the fish-eries imbroglio; withholding patents for land from the Pacific railways until the settlement of the status of these companies; ap-propriating $150,000 to A. De Baussett, to build an air ship. The house then adjourned

WASHINGTON CITY, Jan. 25. - In the senate Tuesday, after a spirited debate, the president's Pacific railways message was referred to a special committee of seven. A bill au-thorizing a bridge across the Mississippi at Burlington, Ia., was passed. Palmer of Michigan made a long speech in favor of his bill to prevent undesirable immigration. The deficiency bill, which failed last session, was then taken up, but without action the senate ness to gain public commendation, providing rewards for E-quimaux natives men. A resolution was adopted requiring f the public printer information as to fur loughs or discharges from his office at a time when the work there was largely in accears, and also whether preference was given to vet eran soldiers in employment. A bill authorizing a bridge across the Mississippi at Breckenridge of Ar-Memphis was passed. kansas introduced a bill authorizing the president to discontinue customs districts where the receipt; are less than the expenses. eastern railway through certain Indian lands. In offering resolutions for the printing of 5,000 copies of the report of the West Point board of visitors, Wheeler of Alabama eulogized Geo. W. Childs, presi dent of the board, and the house adjourned,

TEN MEN BURNED TO DEATH.

Frightful Holocaust at the Burning of a Boarding House.

Tower, Minn., Jan. 28.-Fire broke out in the Barnaby boarding house and saloon, on the main street of the town at an early hour Saturday morning, and before the inmates could be awakened the structure was a sheet of flames. Five men were certainly roasted alive and their charred bodies taken from the ruins, and it is variously estimated that from two to nine others were also caught in the flames. The bodies of the following, burned to a crisp, were recovered: Robert Whitford, W. H. Barnes, Dan O'Connell, Alexander Brandt and Mike Trump.

Everybody was asieep when the fire broke ut, and there was a terrible struggle among those who were saved to reach the street, Men fought with each other in the narrow passageways like wild beasts in their endeavor to reach an exit first, the consequence being that most of those engaged in the struggle perished. One escaped, and tells the story of the panic.

A friend and room-mate of one of the boarders, who was laid up with rheumatism, tried to get his partner out. He got him as far as the front door, and finding that locked, kicked it open. Turning around he could not face the flames, and was compelled to let his companion perish, and barely escaped with his own life.

A young lady who was sick in the doomed building was rescued with difficulty.

There were over thirty people in the build-

LATER. - Search for the bodies of those burned was continued and five more were taken out of the ruins, making a total of ten. All are too badly disfigured to be recognized. It is thought some bodies may have been entirely consumed. One of the bodies is believed to be that of Jack Collins, of Superior, Wis.

Cora Lee Scores a Point.

SPRINGFIELD, Mo., Jan. 24. - The state closed its side in the Cora Lee case at 2:30 o'clock Monday afternoon. Leon Maurice, the first witness Monday morning, recognized in a photograph of Mrs. Graham, a woman that George Graham and Cora Lee had with them the night of the murder. The sworn statement of the defendant, made as ground for a continuance and filed May 25,1886, in which it was admitted that a gray pony such as wes hers we had been driven from the direction her home on the night of the murder by a closely veiled woman answering her description, was offered as evidence by the state. It asked time to get witnesses to prove A bill was reported favorably to the house that Cora Lee was not in the wagon the pony Store.

was drawing, and that it was not her pony, but the defense has not been able to produce witnesses on that point, and consequently these statements would weigh beavily against her. After careful consideration Judge Bland ruled that affidavit out because it had been sworn to on information and belief, and not as an absolute fact. This keeps from the jury the state's strongest testimony.

SPRINGFIELD, Mo., Jan 25,-Twenty-four witnesses for the defense testified Tuesday in the Cora Lee murder trial, their testimony being chiefly in refutation of evidence submitted by the state as to the alleged immoral relations between Cora Lee and Graham before their bigamous marriage, and the circumstantial evidence regarding the murder of Sarah Graham and discovery of her body on Mrs. Molloy's place. Everything sworn to by the prosecuting witnesses, in short, was positively denied by the witnesses for the defense, and testimony was also offered to show that Cora Lee was not in the celebrated wagon drawn by the gray pony the night of Mrs. Graham's murder,

THE Lansing Journal aptly asys there are two policies now being advocated in this country.

First-Reduce the taxes to the actual wants of the government economically administered. This is CLEVELAND'S policy.

Second-Maintain the taxes and spend the surplus. It is unnecessary to say that this is BLAINE's policy.

RANDALL, the high protection leader, who masks as a democrat, has received a set back in his own state, where the democratic state central committee defeated a Randallite for chairman and endorsed President Cleveland's message in the strongest terms. When the nominating convention is held, it is not at all probable that there will be a single state to put forward any other name than that of Cleveland.

A very interesting semi-annual convocation of the Episcopalian diocesian missionary society was held at Hobart Hall, Tuesday and Wednesday. Bishop Gillespie preached the sermon Tuesday morning. In the afternoon several missionary topics were discussed, the tenor of the remarks of the ministers indicating the importance of training laymen for missionary work. In the evening, Rev. Dr. Bunn delivered an eloquent lecture. Wednesday was profitably spent in discussions of the Society for the Propogation of the Gospel and the American church. Missionary work and Sunday School work. The importance of getting busschools was urged. About thirty parishes were represented.

A Highly Praised Concert.

The chamber concert given in Hobart Hall, last Saturday evening, is highly praised by the many who had the good fortune to be present. Miss Grace Hiltz, the wocal soloist of the evening. is no stranger to Ann Arbor audiences. Her tones are pure, and the auditor feels confident that she will always strike just the right note. The programme was lengthy, but was not at all tiresome. In fact, every one praised it.

Rev. Dr. McLean |Leaves Ypsilanti.

The members of the parish of Rev. Dr. McLean, rector of St. Luke's Church, Ypsilanti, and chaplin of the Knight's Templar of this city, naturally learn with the deepest feeling of regret, that the reverend doctor is about to go to Bay City, where a larger field awaits his coming. He has won the first ten subscribers of the fund were affections of his parishioners since he has been in Ypsilanti, and his ministry has been especially blessed. He leaves in March or April.

Leap Year Party Last Night.

A leap year party was held at Hangsterfer's Hall, last evening, abou thirty-five couples being present. The floor managers for the occasion were Mrs. Ross Granger and Miss Nellie Hoban. The committee on introduction, who gracefully performed their part, were Mrs. Lou Stevens and Miss Eva Saunders, while the committee on invitations were Mrs. Ross Granger, Mrs. George Apfel, Mrs. John Lindenschmitt, and Misses Mamie Powers, and Mattie Walz.

Reception to the Grand High Priest.

Upon the return of Mr. B. F. Watts from Grand Rapids, last Thursday evening, where he, had been elected to the office of Grana High Priest of the Grand Chapter of Royal Arch Mason of Michigan, he was invited to the Franklin House, where about fifty members of Washtenaw Chapter had as sembled to tender him a reception and banquet. At the banquet High Priest Stone presided, and congratulatory addresses were made by Hon. A. J. Sawyer, W. G. Doty, Mayor Smith, and a score of others. One pleasant feature of the evening was the presentation to Cashier C. E. Hiscock, Past High Priest of Washtenaw Chapter, of an elegant gold High Priest's jewel. An Evening in Westminister Abbey.

The Rev. Dr. J. C. Eccleston, of

New York, aa personl friend of the late Dean Stanley, through whose official aid he has been enabled to make a critical study of the subject, will deliver on Monday evening the 30th inst., in Hobart Hall a superbly illustrated lecture on "The Monumental and Legendary Lore of Westminister Abbey." This lecture which has been delivered in all the large Atlantic cities has been pronounced by all who have heard it and seen its beautiful illustrations, to be peculiarly interesting and instructive Those who have already visited the great "Monumental Building of England's History" will be glad to renew their acquaintance with it by this lecture and those who have never been so fortunate, will find (to use the words of "Mark Twain" after hearing lecture in | Hartford) "the description of the lecturer the next best thing to seeing the Abbey with their own eyes."

CHAPTER VIL A TEST. "Isn't your father going?"

It was the same evening, and Philip Breton was assisting Bertha into his beach wagon for a twilight drive 'Father has left town for a few days.

afford us a seat apiece to-night."

Bertha adjusted her wraps and the horses stepped off down the street as guyly as if their driver had not been disappointed.

There was not very much conversation toafforded it. Bertha considered she did her part in looking well, smiling prettily at his wittleisms, with now and then a remark, if she felt inclined. But today Philip was moody and silent. So Bertha gave herself up to the sensuous delight of riding, and only spoke in mild exclamations of admiration of the scenery as they left the village behind and followed up the winding river.

But suddenly Philip saw a man's form swaying easily while he took great strides along the footpath.

"Curran," he exclaimed, and stopped his horses close beside him. The man turned, and one might have thought he did not recognize the occupants of the carriage, except that there was the least bit of a flush on his face, which bore the lines of interrupted medita-Then he bowed slightly to Philip.

"And you don't recollect me, I suppose,"

"I am not so stupid," he said, letting his steel blue eyes rest admiringly upon her. "We are going to Lockout, too. You must get in with us."

"No, I won't crowd you; don't move." And he turned a little away from them as if to continue his walk. "Certainly you must!" said Bertha; "see, I have a whole sent to myself and it is so stupid.

And Curran took the seat she offered him, holding back her wraps till he was seated, and then releasing them. "Do you think I shall ever learn to weave

"There must be a wonderful landscape on the other side of the rocks," said Bertha, as Philip stopped his horses for Curran to "Have you plenty of time?" she asked, before the workman could express his thanks.

"An hour to spare." She looked wistfully at the envious rocks that shut them in and then at Curran's Curran's face suddenly flushed with pleasure, "I should like to help you."

In a minute more Bertha was climbing the rocks with her strange escort, and Philip sat holding his horses quite a little distance back, "You didn't talk very much during our drive," said Bertha, as she stood with her companion looking off down the valley. "Is it so wicked of us to be rich." He shot a sudden deprecating look at her. "Don't force me so far. I cannot say it

The girl liked to hear his earnest, thrilling tones, and watch his eyes flash and his nos-trils dilate with such rare passion.

"Is it just," he went on, "that no matter how unweariedly a laborer works, his idle neighbor, as surely as the sun sets, should lay intolerable tribute on his profits so that he must stay forever poor? Is a day's work Then why does it bring in some capitalist thousands of dollars for a stroke of his pen?"

Bertha understood but little of what he was saying, but she could look intently at him with wide open blue eyes, which had a pretty trick of changing expression as if in sympathy with a speaker. Curran felt no que had half listened to him before, that at last every word told, and he was strangely excited by the sweet mystery of

The blacksmith stood by his anvil, hammer in hand, as if frozen, and even Philip Breton was stunned and baffled at the sudden revelation of the fate stamped on this man who had given his life for Bertha's. Philip had been devising how rare a gift of undying friendship he could give him in token of his gratitude, and now a terrible death must be his only reward.

But the face of the victim was as composed as if death had already claimed him. He did not seem to see one of the silent forms that thronged the little shop. Then he looked carefully at the wound in his arm and pressed out the drops of poisoned blood. In another instant he had reached out his right hand toward his forge and grasped the end of a bar of iron that shone at white heat where it touched the coals. He drew it out before one could catch his breath and held it close against the death mark in his quivering flesh. CHAPTER VIII. HIS MISTARE, It was quite dark when the carriage turned the last bend in the winding road homeward out to meet the tired horses as gayly as any. There might have been a sobbing woman behind the cheeriest of them all: nature hows no sympathy for human suffering. If Philip had been idly snapping his whip and looking up the road. He thought he saw in the distance a number of men with them—yes, it must be a dog; an odd hour of surdly out of place in poverty stricken homes. gathered within most of those windows deserved the name of home, with never a smile of contentment to light up a face, or a word Curran's arms-Philip was sitting with his Home to such as they is the place where the cravings of hunger are quieted and the tired cords and muscles are relaxed for a new strain; where they can complain and where

It took but a few moments to reach Bertha' home, but it seemed a long time to Philip, who kept looking back over his shoulder at the flames which to his excited fancy seemed rising higher at every glance. He stopped the horses at Bertha's door at last, and leaping to the ground, assisted her to alight. The orses were panting, but there was no time even to give them breath, and in an instant nore Philip was back in his seat. But Bertha stood as if she had something to say, and he waited before he drew up the reins. "You will make a mistake in leaving me to myself to-night,"

He thought there was a mysterious touch of self distrust in her voice that was soft and almost tender as she looked fixedly at him. Ah! he had never seen her so lovely; as if the warm passionate woman soul had been born in her; and he longed in his rapture to to fall at her feet and kiss them. forgetting the mill in flames as he drank in the new sweet hope she seemed to give him. He could not leave her thus with that wonderful light in her eyes. No doubt the fire was subdued, and how little he could do at best; there were so many stronger than he. But suddenly a tongue of flame leaped up into the black sky like lightning.
"I would so love to stay, darling, but the mills are on fire-my father's mills. I might save them. Don't you understand-it would be infamous in me to"-

"I only said you make a mistake." Till he dies Philip Breton never will forget that scene; the darting flames beckoning him away, and this beautiful woman, for whose first fond caress he would have given everything but his manhood and honor, inviting him to stay. And in her changed face he thought he saw such sweet promise of love if he stayed and such sure presage of evil if he went.

"Good night," he said with faltering voice as he drew up the reins.
"Good night," she answered slowly as she turned to go in, and he thought he heard her other sentence over again, "You make a mistake.

It was Number Two mill on fire, but all that ingenuity and strength could do seemed doing as well without Philip. The men were as busy as bees. Fifty manned the brakes of the hand engine, and pumped as vigorously as if there was no such thing as lame backs and aching muscles, while on top of the en-gine beside the bell, which rang with every stroke of the brakes, stood their foreman keeping time with his arms and whole body, and encouraging them with his hoarse, excited voice. Then there were three hydrants in full operation and a crowd of men to keep the hose in condition, and four more in rubber suits to hold the nozzles and direct the streams of fast flowing water where it would quickest subdue the fierce flames. There seemed nothing for Philip to do. He was worth no more than the crowd of chattering women, who stood as near the fire as their rough voiced men would let them. How odd their thin white faces looked, half hid by the shawls tied about their heads. It was a great looked at her white face and golden brows and lashes, Curran thought of wreaths of very foundations of their world seemed to express their crude thoughts at the breaking up of old associations.

"Carry the hose up to the next story," shouted the foreman. "The ladder is not long enough," answered one of the men in rubber suits.

"Can't you climb? Who can, then? This was Philip's opportunity, and he hurried up the ladder two rounds at a time. Then he swung himself off on the lightning rod. Its sharp edges cut his tender hands, but in his eagerness he did not notice it. In a moment more he had pulled himself up to the window sill and burst in the sash. Then he reached down for the hose and a cheer went up for the rich man's son who was not afraid of work.

He heard his father's voice below thanking the men for their devotion, as the sullen flames seemed to give way before their tireless efforts. But it was no time now for idle elicitations. The fire seemed under control, but if the mastery were relaxed, it would leap high again in its fury, and the other mills must go too, for all they stood now so cold and proud. The smoke grew thinner in the window where Philip stood, so he could look down on the sweaty faces and bending forms of the men at the brakes. Everything depended on them, and how strong they sent water through the hose he held, and forced back the fire inch by inch from its prey. If they could only keep it up a few moments more the mills would be out of danger. Each stroke of the brakes made the hose throb against his side almost like a law been if she could have seen her hero togiant's pulse. God grant them strength a few moments more. Suddenly he heard a loud voice raised

"Wise boys ye be, to clench the nails in yer own coffins. Ain't this mill yer jail and its bosses your jailers? Is there a fool of ye all, but knows old Breton who grins so nice to-night on ve. but knows him for a tyrant, who grinds us to powder?"

Philip saw a short, burly man whose hair was cropped close to his round head, shouting and gesticulating wildly, as he made his way up to the engine and then leaped upon The brakes stop moving and the fire sends up new tongues and leaps along the smoking beams and rafters in fresh fury, while the men listened breathlessly to this stranger. The women too gather nearer, and look in curiosity at their husbands and brothers who drink in so eagerly his poisoned

"I s'pose ye thought ye didn't work long enough for yer ninety cents a day. But ye hev. Ay, boys, that big heap o' brick stands for that old man's meanness; it's the machine to crush ye. It's the way he bleeds ye. But how sweet he is to-night. Ye never noticed it before, did ye? He's seed you a starvin' on the wages be paid, and yer purty darters gone to the bad for the want of a few things all gals kinder like. Some on ye, too, has got old and cripples in his service. He aint ever guv a mite, has he? Now it's your turn.

And the man shouted loud above the hissing, crackling flames that leaped out of a dozen windows in wild glee. "Let his mills burn fur a warnin' to such as he who make so much sorror and misery in this ere purty world that if Satan tortured their cruel souls forevermore, it wouldn't be a feather in the balance. Let him know the despair of a poor man for once.

It was almost madness that glittered in the fellow's darting eyes, and his voice grew hourse and terrible as he pointed his thick fingers at the mill half hid in smoke, lit up in spots with forks of flame.

"Let every plank of it go. It's only served to make him richer each month, and ye poorer. Such a machine as that don't desarve to stand. Let his riches he's used so poor turn to ashes this night. Tears and prayin' couldn't git equal rights for us; the ire will do it, though

Ezekiel Breton elbowed his way into their

He had lost his hat, and stood pale in his agony in the presence of the men who ally he would glance at the girl who had thought he had wronged them. He was consuch pretty poses; he had quite a taste for scious of no guilt; he had only made his money as others made theirs; fairer, indeed, than mere money lenders, who added nothing to the world's productions. He knew, of course, the poor suffered, but a man can't be too squeamish, and the same road was open to them that he had taken. And as for wages, who could blame a man for getting help as cheaply as he can? That is business. Mr. Breton linew but one argument for them.

"If you want pay," he shouted, "here is money, a dollar an hour to each man.'

But not a face relaxed; he looked fearfully from one to another, and then up at the grinning face of the stranger, "only save to. But strange enough the thunderbolt did my mill." The old man put up his hand to his white hair in a piteous gesture as he glanced at the sheets of flame and lurid lit up her dark face. Up the walk, to the smoke that shut off the sky above his devoted front doorway, came the man of whom she mill.

"See the fire grows every second, we are lost unless you go to work; I will pay ten dollars an hour."

The brakes began to move slowly up and down. Philip felt the water throb through for him. the hose as it touched his side, but it was only one fitful spurt, for the stranger, who seemed to hold the mills at his mercy, had smiled rather disagreeably. He had wonfound his voice again.

"Keep yer money, old man; you will need every penny of it, for you've cheated yer last out of yer help in them mills. Yer mill hez got to go,"

Philip saw his father turn toward his mills, the pride of his life, and look as fondly at their grim walls as a man on the woman he loves, and the tears of futile agony wet his cheeks. That moment the young man aged ten years

The crowd fell back again, and another speaker mounted the strange rostrum. He looked young for such a crisis, but there was a new suggestion of power in his lips and the sullen crowd wondered what he thought he could say to persuade them.

"I suppose," began Philip slowly, as if every minute might not be worth a fortune, "I presume," and his voice sounded dry and hard, "you will want your wages as usual, next pay day. Is there any one of you foolish enough to imagine you will get them if the mills go?"

Then the young man glanced at the burly stranger, who, clearly enough, was taken aback by this new style of appeal to a crowd, "Possibly this broad shouldered friend of yours is going to find a living for you. You have got to find it somewhere, and you won't have particularly good characters to recommend you to new tyrants.

"Mind, men, I don't say but it is quite fair, but mill owners manage their business about the same way. It is all very well to complain, but the first necessity is a place to work; if there isn't that, you surely can't have any rights. I may as well tell you, the mills are heavily insured, and you can't quite have the rare satisfaction of seeing that old man ruined. But I doubt if he will care to put any more mills under such extra risks. Some of your women and ignorant people, who don't see the fun of starving, may think you have done a poor night's work.' The stranger had disappeared, and the faces of the men, clustered about their en-gine, had lost their sullen cast. The young an's black eyes glistened in the new ecstasy of an orator's triumph.

The men returned to their work with a murmur of approval. Was it too late! The brakes started up again. The men ran up the ladders again, with the hose in their hands, in the renewed battle with the fire. Philip had moved the crowd. He had chosen instinctively the only method for the crisis, while the flames crackled and flashed in high carnival. "But was it not too late? The men were working with new energy; new hopes were in their hearts. The mill owner's son had promised to halp them; he sympathized with their cheerless poverty, and who could do more than he?

If the whole line of mills went it would be upon their consciences, and the thought put fresh strength into their weary arms and more fearless courage into their hearts, precious time had been lost and the wind had changed so that now the red, greedy tongue of flame lapped the frowning brick walls of the next mill, and lavished their hot, wanton kisses as if it were love and not hate whose fury would consume them.

When the moon was setting in the west, that night, Mr. Breton found his son all grimy with smoke, with clothes torn, and drenched in water, out of all semblance to the gentleman of elegant leisure. He stood by the smoldering ruins of Number Two words and manner at parting had left upon him; as if, some way, in leaving her just when he did, he had lost her forever. God forbid! He could not shake it off; it was with him as he waited almost alone in the great mill yard; all the excitement and responsibilities of the night had not dispelled He looked down moodily into the smoking mass of crumbled walls and roof and blackened timbers, and watched for the little forks of flame that started up boldly, now and then, as if it were not yet too late for a new battle, and then seemed abashed at finding themselves alone in the dark, and sank

Philip looked up at the seorched walls off on the right, and the long pile of massive structures away to the left, unshaken by the whirlwind of fire. In a few hours more they would be alive with rushing belts and wheels, and with the feet of the men and women, telling how strange it was there was a place left for work today. Yes, he had saved them, "but at what price?" He spoke half to himself. If he only knew what Bertha had

"What price? Oh, your promise to do what you could for the men and all that. It was guardedly put, my boy." And his father laughed appreciatively. "Inexorable parent aughed appreciatively. must be considered, though, ha, ha. You will catch your death of cold. Well, if you will stay, good night."

CHAPTER IX. WEAK MAN.

It was at dusk a few days after Jane Graves had come to the Ellingsworths that she stood at the dining room window.

It was almost in sight of ber old dreary ome, and yet another world; how strange that the two should be so near and not change r shadow each other. But Jane Graves was not the girl to trouble herself over hard questions. She breathed her new atmosphere in unmixed delight, while latent senses awoke each day only to be gratified.

At this moment she stood in a very charmig attitude leaning lightly against the window casing, her prettily rounded arm raised to play with the curtain tassel. Her master rather liked to linger in the dining room old read his evening paper. Occasion pictures, and then she afforded him an excus for not a little cynical philosophy. Mr Ellingsworth had one peculiarity that would certainly seem very commendable. He never spoke rudely to any one; it would have been impossible for his finely grained nature. She thought him polite and kind, and in her innocence imagined his was the usual manner of the well bred with their hirelings. The other servants knew that bumiliation was a part of their required week's work, which their wages were considered to pay for; and expected to see the thunderbolt fall on this foolish girl who did not know how precious was the purchased privilege of being cringed

Suddenly the girl started, and a deep flush thought, with his own lordly stride as if he were a prince, indeed, as he deserved to be, Her heart was in a sweet glow; he had found her out, and had come for her. She would leave all these beautiful things with rapture

Mr. Ellingsworth saw the man's figure at dered before why her lover didn't come, and here he was at the front door, no doubt expecting to be entertained in the parlor.

Jane Graves glited into the hall. Suddenly grown shy at the maiden passion of her own heart, she slowly opened the front door. What would he say first? Would he take her hand which had grown so white and soft lately? Would he ask to kiss her, and with beating heart she stood in the open door-

It had now grown almost dark, perhaps he did not see her plainly.

"Did you ring?" she asked foolishly, while her heart sank down, down, would it never stop?

"Is your mistress in?" What was this-some strange mistake? Could he not see who it was held the door open for him?

"My mistress, Miss Ellingsworth? why yes, she is in the parlor." It must be a joke, but now he had frightened her enough, and how they would laugh together over it. She was attempting to smile, when she heard the parlor door open behind her. "Yes, I am here." It was Bertha Ellings-worth's voice. The visitor passed in, and Jane Graves shut the outer door heavily and sank upon the floor, pressing with both her hands against her bursting heart. Then she leaped upon her feet in sudden madness and hurried along the hall to the parlor door. What right had this rich woman to steal away her lover? She would care only to amuse herself with him for a few days and then her servants would be told to shut the door in his face. Such cold creatures as she never love; passion they know nothing of, only the passion to break honest men's hearts. Why not warn him? Oh, but what was Jane Graves to him? he might remind her how he had spurned her from him once.

Jane Graves went back into the dining room, now grown dark, and threw herself into a chair. The poor cannot fight against the rich. Ah! but she could hate her mistress' white face. She could curse her in her thoughts with all the evils in the universe. girl burst into a passion of tears.

"One thing I will promise. I will do what I can in your behalf. I know the lines of her master's voice. She had forgotten him. The girl heard him draw a chair near hers,

"Was your beau unkind to you? Well, don't have anything more to say to him.

then, Jennie." Why! the elegant Mr. Ellingsworth was actually kissing his maid! What difference did it make the one she loved had thrown her away, and trampled her devotion under his feet. She even let him draw her shapely little head to his shoulder, and take her hands away from her face. They hid her lips, he

Mr. Ellingsworth was actually kissing his maid!

Mr. Ellingsworth answered the bell himself—a breach of etiquette not frequent with him, even under the liberalizing influence of village manners. "Mr. Breton, charmed to see you," and there was not the faintest trace of ill humor in his perfectly trained voice. The old gentleman might have been the most opportune

But his daughter had not been schooled enough for such self control, and she started to her feet as her parlor door opened, almost in consternation. There was quite a study for character in the room at that moment, Curran had not arisen; his lips might have been closed a little tighter than usual, but his face did not even reveal surprise. Mr. Breton had reached the center of the room before he saw whom Bertha had been entertaining, but now he stood in astonishment—which he had no concern to hide—snapping his black eyes from the young lady who was soon to be his son's wife to this weaver in the mill, who did not seem so much out of place in this fashionable parlor, either. The crisis had come, and Bertha was entirely unpre-pared for it. Her heart was fluttering wildly, and for the moment she wished she had never seen the man whose presence embarrassed her. A moment before she had forgotten there was such a thing as wealth or rank, devoutly confident such a man as her guest could stand before kings; but the door had opened and let in the breath of pride and caste, scattering the halo about the poor man's head. Suddenly she looked with new repugnance at him she had just thought so sublime. Why did he not go? She was flushed with vexation at his stubbornness in delaying. Had he no sense of propriety, to court a social meeting with her aristocratic father, who would ridicule him without his guessing it, and the blunt mill owner, who yould be sure to insult and browbeat him plainly! She expected to see him rise awkwardly and shuffle out of the room, perhaps pulling his forelock respectfully to the company that was not for such as he.

The Manistee Sun charged a citizen of that town with improper treatment of an orphan was sued for libel, and not only won the case, but now has custody of the girl. The Sun celebrated its victory with a "red line" edition; that is, the paper was printed in red ink, as a warning to future repeaters of the libel act.

Michigan railroads take a full hand in the lumber deal. During 1887 the Flint & Pere Marquette hauled 215,000,000 feet of logs, the Michigan Central 148,000,000, and the Detroit, Bay City & Alpena 218,000,000.

A MUCH MARRIED MAN.

An Engineer of St. Paul Who Has Led Five Brides to the Altar.

St. Paul, Minn., Jan. 21—Mrs. John Wilkins is the plaintiff in a suit for divorce from her husband, who is alleged to have wedded four other women. The papers in the case were filed in the district court Tuesday. In 1870 Wilkins married the plaintiff in Fagundas, Pa., where they lived happily for a number of years. He then moved to St. Paul, bringing his young wife with him. In May, 1887, he contracted a marriage with Emma Stetson, and a few months later mar-ried another woman named Kate Fox, who is now a dressmaker in this city. Shortly afterward he married a woman named French, and followed this in August by marrying one Hattie Bowles. Each of these marriages was contracted under an assumed name. Added to this he was engaged to a handsome widow who is now employed at a corset-making establishment here. The difficulty of maintaining so many wives soon forced itself upon Wilkins, and last October he left the city taking with him Emma Stet-son, who was his favorite. He was employed as an engineer while in this city. His parents reside in Cleveland, where his father is said to be quite wealthy, and a stockholder in the Standard Oil company.

POISON IN THE SCRAPPLE.

A Butcher's Carelessness Makes Many People Violently Itl.

CHESTER, Pa., Jan. 24. - George L. Horning, a butcher at Second and Parker streets, filled a pan of scrapple with "Rough on rats" Saturday and placed it in the ice-box for the purpose of making a wholesale slaughter of the roden's infesting his place. He forgot to tell his men about the doctored pan, and one of his agents, Newill Carr, took the scrapple along with him on his regular rounds.

Monday a dozen people who had eaten of the poisoned meat were prostrated, with several of them dangerously ill and almost beyond recovery. Chief of Police Newsome, his wife and son, John Newsome, were among the afflicted. They suffered intense pain, with severe fits of vomiting, but are now comparatively well. A young son of Thomas Gallagher ate a small piece of the uncooked scrapple and was made sick. Mrs. James Ross and her four children were taken with violent pain in the stomach and were soon rolling about in agony. Mrs. Harry Dych and son, John, also ate the scrapple, and had it not been for the prompt use of emetics would have died. The victims are all recovering and none will die.

"The Devil Was in the Preacher."

ADRIAN, Mich., Jan. 24.-On Sunday, Jan. 15, the Presbyterian church was closed against its pastor, the Rev. G. P. Blanchard, the only explanation given by the officers being that "the devil was in the preacher Monday a document was printed over the reverend gentleman's signature confessing that while calling on the wife of Dr. Me Donald, as a minister, he made sinful advances and asking forgiveness of the lady, her husband, and his God. There are stories of other irregularities on the preacher's pari, and it is claimed that he left Paw Paw under He is a man of wide acquaintance in Michigan.

The Calumet Still Burning. MARQUETTE, Mich., Jan. 23.—Another big cave-in occurred at the Calumet and Hecia mine, at Calumet, at 4 o'clock Sunday, the surface for fifty feet south of No. 1 shaft of the Hecla branch falling. Immense columns of smoke and steam poured from the opened mine, and though a determined effort is being made to close the opening smoke and gas are still escaping.

MILLIONS IN MILLINERY.

THE FLAMES REVEL FOR HOURS AMONG BONNET MATERIALS.

An Aggregate Loss of Property Amounting to $1,500,000 in the Philadelphia Feminine Head-Gear District-Exciting Scene at a Chicago Fire-Seventy-five Boys in a Panic-No One Badly Hurt.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 24.—An alarm of fire was sounded from Eighth and Arch streets at 7 o'clock Monday night. The fire department responded promptly. The fire proved to be in a chimney, and, as supposed, was put out without bringing the department into service. At 11 p. m., another alarm was sounded from the same location. In a few moments the entire structure of Marks Bros.' millinery and ladies wear, northwest corner Eighth and Arch, was reduced to ashes.

The conflagration spread with almost in-credible rapidity and the heat was most intense, the contents of the buildings being in the highest degree inflammable. In a very few minutes the fire had made such progress that the flames leaped across Warfield place, a little alley separating Marks Bros,' building from that of Shoneman Bros., extending on Eighth street from 116 to 122, and seized upan it. Their fierceness was checked, however by the firemen, and though the building was badly gutted it was not so entirely destroyed as that of Marks Bros.

At the same time the intense heat and the flames set fire to the buildings on the east side of Eighth street. These were occupied by Adolph Heller, importer and dealer in milliner's goods, from No. 101 to 113, and Strause, Thanbauser & Co., Nos. 118 to 115, also dealers in millinery goods. The buildings were old three story structures and were filled with the same class of goods as the buildings first on fire. Strause & Than-hauser & Co. also had a front at 733 Arch street, and the rear of this building also caught. Shortly after 12 p'clock a violent explosion occurred, said to lave been caused by the chemicals in Rodrigo's establishment. After the walls on either side of Eighth street had tumbled in the fury of the fire began to exhaust itself, and the firemen were better able to put in some effective work. The heat from the fire for some time was so intense that it was impossible toutand within several bundred feet of the burning buildings. The flames shot out of the Marks building and across Arch street with great flerceness, setting fire to the building on the southwest corner of Eighth and Arch streets, occupied by Frederick Knapple, confectioner. It was with the greatest difficulty that the building and several occupants were saved. Knapple's loss can not be estimated, but it will be several thousand dollars; covered by insurance. No. 802 Arch street is Shuster's cafe and confectionery store. The building is an "L"-shaped one, and extends through to Eighth street. The roof and woodwork on the Arch street front of the house was burned,

Mr. Shuster has an insurance of $8,000 on it. Other firms losing by fire and water were William Mencke; Abel & Co., importers of feathers and flowers, 806 Arch street; L. Donnenbaum & Sons, silk and millinery goods, 808 Arch; W. H. Clark, Butterick's patterns, and Mrs. Avornt, boarding house, 809 Arch; All the above the street of the street 809 Arch. All the above were well insured At 2:30 a m. Tuesday the fire was well under control. The estimated losses foot up

FRANTIC BOYS IN A FACTORY.

Three of Them Jump from the Windows -A Rush Through Flames.

CHICAGO, Jan. 24. - Seventy-five boys rushed frantically about the work-room in the second story of the Chicago Glass Manufacturing company's building at Fortieth street and Wentworth avenue late Monday afternoon. From the narrow stairway which was the only exit from the room the smoke poured up in stifling clouds. The reflection of a small flame flickered fitfully at the bottom of the stairway and made the boys fearful of the descent. Windows were thrown open and anxious heads were thrust out, William Connors was the first lad to try the leap. "It's all right," he shouted, as he picked himself up from the snowdrift in which he had alighted. Adolph Gogir, encouraged by Comor's reassuring remark, also leaped, but when he struck the ground he was unable to rise, as the full had sprained his ankle and bruised him badly. As he was lying upon the ground he heard a whining sound in the air and James O'Neill landed by his side with a broken wrist, John Noonan and Thomas Westfield, who were at work in the room with the boys, finally averted the panic, and stood at the head of the stairs until the last of the lads had descended. By this time, however, a wall of fire blazed between them and safety. With a frantic rush they hurried through the flames, and fell senseless after they reached the street. Darts of flame shot out from the lower windows, and the two men would have undoubtedly been burned to death had it not been for the bravery of John Brownson, who rushed through the flame and dragged them to a place of The origin of the blaze is unknown. The loss is about $50,000, and fully insured.

Roman Catholic Parsonage Burned. BRIDGEPS RE, Conn., Jan. 24. - The parsonage of St. Augustine's Roman Catholic parish was burned Monday night, with its valuable library, church records, silver plate and many articles whose value cannot be estimated in figures. The pecuniary damage is about $50,000.
