Carver's Wild West Coming.

A big attraction has been secured for the last day of the county fair, Friday, September 30. It is nothing less than the celebrated Dr. Carvers Combination Wild West show. One price of admission on that day admits to the heat educated horses and dogs show. No wild west show, to the fair, and to the such a combination of attractions has ever before been offered at any fair ever held in this county. The officers are pushing the preparations for the most successful fair ever held in the Accident to G. Frank Allmendinger.

G. Frank Allmendinger had a leg broken by being thrown from a carriage, Wednesday morning. He was crossing the bridge over the Michigan Central at the depot in a carriage with his partner, Mr. Schneider, when the spirited horse they were driving took fright at a locomotive passing beneath the bridge and threw both gentlemen out. Mr. Allmendinger's leg was broken at the ankle. He was taken home in a hack and Dr. Darling, who is attending him, reports that he is doing as well as could be expected.

To the Women Poets of Michigan.

It has been wisely suggested by the esteemed member of the Board of World's Fair Managers of Michigan, Mrs. Julia Augusta Pond, that all the women poets of Michigan be represented at the World's Fair, and accordingly the management and direction of plans to that effect has been entrusted to the undersigned, It is now necessary to establish correspondence with every woman poet in the state, whose productions have been published heretofore in newspapers or magazines only, as the plan is intended for those who cannot contribute a book of their own poems. All such are requested to at once address for further information, etc.

The campaign in Indiana will be a warm one. Already preparations are being made for a big Democratic barbecue at Shelbyville, Ind., at which fifty cattle and hundreds of calves and sheep will be slaughtered. The next vice-president is down for a speech, as are Carlisle, Breckenridge, Hill, Vilas, Gray, Boies, Cochran, Voorheis, and many other prominent Democrats. The committee are making preparations to entertain over 60,000 visitors. It will prove a barbecue long to be remembered in Indiana.

GROSS MISREPRESENTATION.

A Democrat who claims to know all about it informs the Enterprise that the "ring" at Ann Arbor have fixed up everything for the coming county convention. The county officers do not constitute such a ring. The most of them are keeping their hands off the next Democratic convention, in every sense of the term keeping hands off. Some of them may have preferences among the numerous candidates, but we venture that not more than two of them favor the same candidate. The candidates for office have not yet been decided upon. Mr. M. Haller has just returned from the great furniture centers, Grand Rapids, Milwaukee and Chicago, where he made extensive selections for fall trade. He says he will be able to show a finer class of goods especially in parlor furniture, fancy chairs and fancy cabinet ware, than has ever been exhibited in our city. While in Chicago Mr. Haller also called on the carpet firm that he represents here, O. W. Richardson & Co. This firm's business formerly located near Adams-st., has grown so largely that they were obliged to look for larger quarters. They are now located on Wabash-ave., opposite the Auditorium in a six story building in which they carry on a business that would astonish anyone. Over 150 people are busy in cutting, sewing, and packing carpets to fill orders that are sent in daily from their representatives throughout the different states. Careful and just attention to everything has brought such prosperity to this business. Mr. Haller has a full line of samples in our City from above-named firm.

We also notice that Mr. Haller has made arrangements with a Philadelphia firm to take orders, and lay parquet floors of all designs, and is also prepared to furnish every style of grill work.

THRASHING WHEAT.

The Popularity of Thrashing from the Shock Rather Than from the Stack. The advantages claimed by some for stacking wheat are: 1. Thrashing can be done from the stack at much less cost in a season when help is plentiful and easily obtained. 2. The wheat can be thrashed cleaner from the straw. Some claim enough is thus saved to pay the thrashers' bill. 3. By going through a sweat in the stack the grain is of better quality, plumper and brighter in color, and by reason of going through a sweat in the stack is absolutely safe to store in bulk of any desired amount. An Ohio farmer correspondent, while admitting that there are some grounds for these claims, thinks that thrashing from the shock is becoming generally popular of late years, especially in sections where considerable areas are grown, and he gives the following reasons for this: Perhaps the decline in stacking results from the liability of farmers to get their wheat stacked in a manner to insure it keeping properly in case much rain follows the stacking, as good wheat stackers are about as scarce as hens teeth. Farmers generally have learned by bitter experience that it is safer to leave their wheat in the shock a considerable time if necessary, and incur some additional expense in thrashing from the shock, rather than run the risk of having their wheat stacked in a bungling. unskillful manner. If we are lucky enough to have favorable weather and can exchange team work with a neighbor -which can usually be done-thrashing from the shock need not be attended with much if any greater cost than thrashing from the stack, as the extra number of teams required is the only item of additional cost. And if a balance be struck between the two methods of thrashing we actually find a saving (in favor of thrashing from the shock) of the labor of stacker, of the person handing sheaves to stacker and of the labor necessary to deliver the sheaves from the rick to the machine, which labor, all told, will require four men to perform.

The man who strikes a wet time in his first experience in thrashing from the shock will not be very enthusiastic in his praise of the practice, while if the weather proves favorable it will remain for some future season to apprise him of its many possible disadvantages. Since by experience I have become thoroughly initiated in this manner of thrashing, I find it best when a wet spell comes on to postpone operations indefinitely and discharge all hands until the weather shows signs of being settled and the wheat thoroughly dries out.

Bear in mind that wheat thrashed wet or damp can never be properly dried, even with a very great expenditure of labor, and if stored in bulk in this condition the efforts of nature to get rid of the dampness result in a rise of temperature in the grain, according to the amount of dampness it contains. If the heat is excessive the grain cakes and molds, producing a musty smell not only on the outside of the grain, but also extends to the interior, resulting in serious deterioration of both quality and value of the flour manufactured from it. The quickest, best and only place to dry wheat is while yet in the straw. A light shower or heavy dew will quickly dry, but in case of continued damp weather, though little rain falls, renders wheat unfit for thrashing from the shock.

The length of time wheat should stand in the field before being threshed depends on the state of ripeness when cut and the weather following. It will need to stand longer than if the wheat is to be put in stack, and here is where stacking sometimes has an advantage over thrashing from the shock, as the wheat can be taken off the fields before the grass is killed under the shocks, which will be from six to ten days with clover and fifteen to twenty days with

The Corn Acreage.

Reports from the department of agriculture show the acreage of corn, as compared with the area of last year, to be 95.6 per cent. The reduction of area has mainly been confined to the great corn producing regions of the Ohio, upper Mississippi and Missouri valleys. In these districts the falling off is much heavier than the general average above given, the loss here having been in a measure offset by an increasing acreage in the Atlantic states, and in the south districts, in which corn is not a prominent crop. In the seven surplus states which furnish the bulk of commercial corn the acreage this year as compared with last year's area is as follows: Ohio, 90; Indiana, 84; Illinois, 84; Iowa, 87; Missouri, 86; Kansas, 99; Nebraska, 97; average, 89. This decrease has been in a measure offset by the increased acreage in the south, where a portion of last year's cotton belt has been given to corn.

In the eleven cotton states the present corn acreage, compared with that of last year, is 107.5. This makes a large increase in the aggregate area of that section, but it should be borne in mind that the yield per acre in the surplus states, leaf districts showing an increased acrewhere the acreage has been reduced, is much larger than in the south, where it vival in tobacco planting in the Conis increased.

HARVESTING ONIONS.

Pulling, Subsequent Handling, Market

In a report of a farmers' meeting, taken for The Farmers' Review, occurs the following:

As the onion develops and the crop begins to mature, the tops turn yellow and shrivel up near the bulb, and fall over. This usually occurs about the last of August or the early part of September. When the majority have fallen over the crop is ripe and should be harvested immediately. If the seeding was late and the weather is wet in the fall. the onions may not ripen at all; hence the great necessity of early seeding. The necks of the onions are sometimes bent over to hasten the ripening process by checking the flow of sap to the tops. This may be done by a light hand roller.

The pulling of the crop should not be delayed after the onions are ripe, for if the weather should become wet a secondary growth of the bulbs may take place, which will seriously injure the crop. The pulling may be done by hand, and more easily and quickly, and perhaps as well, by a common garden rake. The onions may be simply lifted from the ground, and left to dry where they grow, or, as is the usual practice, two or three or more rows may be thrown into one wide window. By using the rake all this can be done without stooping.

The drying should continue until the onions are hard and firm, perhaps two weeks; then they should be gathered. Gather with the tops on, using them as handles. Handle carefully; all bruises are apt to cause rot. Much handling and bruising are saved by gathering and hauling in large sacks. Pile the onions on the floor of a dry but open and well ventilated building, and not over two or three or four feet deep. Here they may be left as long as warm weather lasts, and the tops may be pulled off at leisure or when the onions are needed for market. In topping, the small onions are carefully sorted out and sold as pickle onions.

The price of onions varies greatly. From September to March prices may range from two to six dollars per bar-The general truth is that those brought latest to market, being kept till near spring, bring the the best prices. If it is desired to keep the crop for a winter market it should be stored in a cool, dry place, out of danger of severe frosts, in bulk, in shallow, slat bottomed bins not over two feet in depth.

Reducing Bones for Fertilizer.

A simple plan, for dissolving bones that accumulate about the farm, without the use of acid, is as follows: Crush the bones as thoroughly as possible, and provide a barrel of fresh burned lime and three barrels of strong, hard wood ashes for every barrel of crushed bone. Use as a base of mixing hearth a tight floor or a level layer of loamy soil about six inches thick. Upon this spread a barrel of ashes in a similar layer: then. in a thinner layer, half a barrel of bone; scatter through the bone, to fill the space, and spread upon it a half barrel of lime, pulverized, but not slaked. On this spread a second barrel of ashes. Wet this pile gradually with a sprinkler, using about ten gallons of water, or enough to moisten all, but have none run out. Add in like manner a half barrel of bone, a half barrel of lime, a barrel of ashes and ten gallons more of water. Over all scatter about one bushel of land plaster, and cover the entire pile with dry loam. Examine the pile once a week if needed and add water to keep all moist, but not wet. In four or fiv weeks shovel over and thoroughly mix, moisten and pile again, cover with soil and a little more plaster, and leave two two or three weeks longer. If pieces of bone then remain undecomposed, sift them out, use in next compost, or add more quicklime and ashes to give further time.—Maryland Agricultural College.

Lice on Fowls.

Body lice on fowls are hard to destroy and must be kept down systematically. Fanciers' Monthly says no single preparation will entirely exterminate them and advises the following:

Provide birds with good dust bath in which tobacco dust, ashes, sulphur, etc., have been mixed. Occasionally give them a thorough powdering with buhach. The main point is to keep the roosts, nest boxes and house entirely free from vermin, and if then given a good dust bath the fowls will keep themselves comparatively free from lice. For lice on the heads of the chickens powder them well with tobacco dust. buhach or any good insect powder. Some breeders use oil or grease, but we consider such a remedy worse than the disease—a dry powder is the only thing that should be applied to very small chickens. Large gray lice come from the hens. If you once rid the chickens of such vermin and thereafter pay proper attention to the coops you will experience no further trouble from that

Failure of the Sugar Bounty.

The "maple sugar vote" in New England is greatly dissatisfied with the workings of the McKinley law. That measure removed the duty on imported sugar, but offered the home producer a bounty as compensation. But the new system does not suit the Vermont owners of maple groves at all. They complain that they are being ruined by the pauper maple sugar of Canada. Congressman Powers drew this alarming picture of the situation in a speech delivered in the house recently:

"The maple sugar production of Vermont is about 15,000,000 pounds. The production of Canada, just across the line, is 20,000,000. But the possibilities of production in Canada are perfectly astounding; 100,000,000 pounds might be produced there, and since this bounty was given to the maple sugar producer there have been ten carloads of maple the past week, returned home Mon- sugar imported into this country from Canada where before there was but one. It is imported to the city of Chicago and there adulterated, and is sold, as I Alpena, who have been visiting in am told, through the west for Verment

So desperate is the situation of the Vermonters that Mr. Powers has introduced a bill to restore the old duty and to repeal the bounty. One of his objections to the bounty system is that the red tape necessary in order to get it compels the producer to lose the early market on maple sugar and forfeit more than two cents a pound if he undertakes to secure the bounty. Mr. Powers declares that "if the old tariff upon sugar were restored, so as to keep foreign sugar out week, on his way home from a trip and leave the market to our own product, then our maple sugar producers would Mrs. M. J. Furnum arrived home be vastly better off than they are last evening after a delightful visit now." All of which illustrates again the difficulty of sniting people by any device to put money in their pockets by Orangevill Mills and with friends way of the federal treasury.—New York

TRUSTS VS. LABOR.

PRICES MAY BE ADVANCED.

Devastating Effects of the Cordage Trust Shown in the Record of Lockouts and Wage Reductions Made in Order to Insure Profits to Owners of Idle Mills.

The following from the speech of Senator Vest of July 26, and printed in The Congressional Record of July 27, is good evidence of the effects of trusts, combines, etc., upon labor. In a previous speech the senator had printed the list of "100 tariff trusts" as prepared by Hon. John De Witt Warner for the New York World. As written there the main object was to show that tariffs foster trusts and that trusts invariably advance prices or at least retard their natural decline. The object of the new matter introduced by Senator Vest is to show that trusts by keeping mills idle throw men out of employment and by increasing the number of competitors for each job of work tend "Cordage Trust (including binding twine, cables, rope, twine, etc.)-Tariff. Those who knew the appearance of Binding twine, .7 cent per pound; other twine, 21/2 cents per pound; hemp cables and cordage, 21/2 cents per pound; other cables and cordage, 1½ cents.

"The Cordage trust, which was formed in October, 1887, furnishes a good illustration of the way in which trusts affect labor. As the trust gained control of to limit production and advance prices, but had power to dictate terms to its employees. It was not until 1890, when the trust was reorganized and when it secured control of eleven cordage factories in Canada, that its power over production and labor became supreme. Aside from the maintaining of high prices, which of itself limits the use of cordage and therefore the demand for labor, the present condition of the mills owned and controlled by the trusts is sufficient evidence of the devastating effects upon production and labor of this trust, which has the following record of lockouts and wage reductions in order to insure sufficient profit at the mills, by the council this year, and a great kept running to pay dividends to the owners of the rest thus hired to stay idle. On an average it takes about 100 employees to attend to 100 spindles; these in the binder twine mills, are mostly girls, and in cordage and twine mills mostly boys and men:

Tucker & Carter Cordage company, Brooklyn, 600 spindles. Not running full, but little of time; averages perhaps 300 spindles.

"Of the eleven concerns in Canada belonging to the National Cordage trust probably only about two-thirds are running at all regularly. There, as here, the tariff enables the trust to keep up prices and make sufficient profits to pay big dividends on idle mills and to purchase at exorbitant prices establishments that threaten to undersell the trust. The trust also controls by agreement the factories of W. L. Boone, Jr., Brooklyn, and Joseph L. Podd, Paterson, manufacturers of binding twine and cordage machinery, so that these companies, which control and hold valuable patents, cannot sell cordage machines to nonmembers of the trust. This decreases the output of these machines and throws labor out of employment." But perhaps the worst evidence against this trust as to its treatment of labor is found in its deals with Mr. John Good, who has one of the largest and best equipped cordage mills in the country. This mill is situated at Ravenswood, L. I., and when running employs 300 persons. For some time previous to Nov. 2, 1891, the Cordage trust had been paying Mr. Good $150,000 per year to keep his mill idle. On Nov. 2, 1891, this amount was increased to $200,000, and the agreement was carried out until April 4, 1892, when Mr. Good returned the trust's check, because at the high prices at which cordage had been selling he found that he could make more money by operating his mill.
