A BIG CHANGE IN TAXES FROM LAST YEAR James Clements.....

The Relative Position of the Heavy Tax Rinsey & Seabolt..... Payers Greatly Changed-The Mortgage Tax Law Greatly Reduces the Leaders of Last Year.

Taxes are sure to come. They are due now as many of our citizens unwillingly admit to themselves. The mortgage tax law has wrought a great change from last year. The leaders of last year, don't lead this year. Several tax payers pay in $700 less each this year than last. Others pay more. All who own simply unmortgaged real estate will find their taxes increased. The following are the figures hastily compiled of the heaviest tax payers of the city. The list will not be found to be absolutely correct. Much of the property has changed hands since assessment and a few stray pieces may have got away from our reporter. But the list is comparatively a correct one. It shows that only two tax payers pay over $1,000 this year, as against four last year, eight pay between $500 and $1,000, as against twelve last year, seventeen pay between $300 and $500, as against twenty last year, forty-four pay between $200 and $300, which is the same number as last year. 112 pay between $100 and $200, as William M. Must Homeopathy Go?

The medical constituency of the University was surprised to a considerable degree by the announcement in the Detroit Tribune, Saturday morning, that changes were contemplated in the Homeopathic department which might result in its abolition. In order to get at the facts in the case, and give both sides of the question so as to do equal justice to all, a representative of the DAILY called on the leading gentlemen of both schools. While they all admit that a change is being contemplated, they scout the idea that the Homeopathic school is to be abolished, for, they say, what would the University gain by such action which could only result in a loss in a number of ways. It has been known for some time that Dean Obetz, of the Homeopathic school, has been attempting to form a closer union of the departments, but as to his plan, which has not been formally presented, he is not

CARE OF CORNSTALKS.

Advice for Farmers Who Have Not Adopted Silos. There is necessarily much difficulty in saving coarse stalks of corn full of sap so as to make good feed in winter by ordinary methods. It is this fact which has had much to do with making ensilage popular. For the benefit of those who have no silos, but are in the habit of leaving the cornstalks in the field until dried out by freezing weather. The American Cultivator gives this ad-The common objection to drawing stalks in early is that they will heat in mow or stack. If piled in large heaps soon after being cut the mass will rot down and be good for nothing except manure. But some fermentation is not abjectionable if not carried too far. It in a way cooks the stalks, and everwhen it results in some loss of nutrition it makes what remains more palatable, and probably also more easy to be digested. We have often seen cattle in winter greedily picking out the stalks that had become overheated in the mow. and when fed were still moist from the heating. Some of these stalks were mildewed, and we feared that they might, if fed to cows bearing young, cause abortion, but we later abandoned that theory as a mistake. There is, we believe, less danger from excessive and injurious heating of fresh stalks, dried as much as they can be without exposure to rain and freezing, him certain propositions concern- than there is from wet stalks that have ments is possible except in the event heat if piled up, and in hot weather will eopathic principles.'' The straw itself thus subjected to heating will become more palatable, and will be eaten by stock which will refuse dry straw from the stack. Straw is plentiful at ing of homeopathy." "As regards this season on most large farms. There the abolition of the homeopathic can be no better way to use it than in Autumn Cultivation.

Theoretically there is nothing better than autumn cultivation, and this is often spoken of as a practice that may be followed in any season. The weather No. 1. controls the extent to which it can be carried out, and though when well executed there is nothing of greater value, yet injudiciously effected more harm than good may be done. Perhaps the greatest good can be done on heavy soils, No. 2. as they are then turned over when in a dry condition, and soils inverted when dry rarely run together, however much wet falls on them during winter; consequently they turn out dry and easily worked in spring, whereas, if plowed mellow seed beds are made. The lighter soils can of course be worked advantageously in less favorable weather, so a longer season remains for working them; consequently an apparent backwardness may often be made good. But whatever second semester by Prof. Knowlton. the evil there is no doubt that, where possible, it is an advantage to go forward with the tilling in autumn.

STORING COMB HONEY.

How to Keep It So That It Will Be Better Than When Taken from the Hive. In answer to the question how and where to store comb honey during winter G. M. Doolittle gives the following advice and personal experience in Gleanings in Bee Culture:

Comb honey should always be stored in a warm, dry place during the fall and spring months at least, when a great change of temperature is likely to take place, but during the winter it may be kept in a dry basement room or cellar where no frost ever reaches, provided you are on the lookout to take it out when the temperature on the outside rises much above that in the basement. Otherwise the warm, moist outside air, coming in contact with the surface of the cold or cooler honey, will cause moisture to stand in drops on the combs, when the honey will rapidly deteriorate. If I were trying to keep honey of any amount which I wished to preserve in salable form, I would not let the temperature of the room ever go below 60 degs., while from 70 to 90 degs. would be better.

I once kept some section honey for three years, and found it better at the end of the three years than it was when taken from the hive. This honey was placed on a shelf about four feet from the floor of the sitting room, right back of a base burner coal stove, during the time the stove had a fire in it, while during the summer months, when no fire was kept in the stove, the honey was carried to an upper chamber facing the south, where the sun made the room very warm, in addition to the warmth coming from the kitchen stovepipe, which ran through this chamber. In this way the honey never "saw" a temperature of less than 60 degs., while from 80 to 100 degs. was the rule much of the time. When I cut this honey it was nearly "jack wax," and for quality it was not surpassed by any I ever tasted.

I have often thought that it might pay to use this plan on a whole crop of honey during years when the production exceeded the demand, thus causing low prices to prevail, while the very next year might be a poor one, so that thus keeping it might double in price. When combs of honey are to be given to the bees the cracking of the comb does no harm, for the bees will fix it up during the next season so it cannot be told where the cracks were.

Live Stock Pests.

The veterinarian of the Louisiana experiment station in a report recommends for the horse bot attending to the general health and condition of the animal by thorough grooming and cleanliness. and improving his appetite and digestion by the use of some mineral or vegetable tonic, such as gentian, ginger, cinchona bark or some of the salts of iron. Under the head of the screwworm fly an interesting case is given, in which the screwworm rendered valuable assistance in removing a morbid growth in a hoof crack of a mule brought to the infirmary of the station for treatment. The worms removed the growth completely, and the veterinarian then re- $1.00. moved the worms. Nothing is recommended for the ox warble except the application of tobacco juice and a 2 per cent, solution of carbolic acid to prevent the deposition of the eggs.

Grow More Roots.

The advice is always being given to grow more roots, and their advantages, especially as cattle feed, are descanted on, but a southern Wisconsin woman, writing to the New York World, thinks there are two sides to this question. She says: "Granting their value to feed, there is no crop more laborious to raise than roots. They must be often cultivated to keep down weeds, and when it comes to harvesting them it is the hardest kind of work; then to feed them properly they should be washed and afterward sliced." Taking all this into consideration it is no wonder that it is easier to advise others to raise roots than it would be for a person to raise them himself. The roots ought to be very valuable to pay for the trouble their production involves.

State Averages of Yield Per Acre. According to Statistician Dodge, the range of yields of ten years for corn has report for wheat gives the state averages of yield per acre, ranging from 6½ to 23 bushels and averaging 12 brokels. bushels and averaging 13 bushels. The averages of the principal wheat growing states are as follows: New York, 14.3; Pennsylvania, 14.4; Texas, 12.3; Ohio, 13.2; Michigan, 14.7; Indiana, 14; Illinois, 14.7: Wisconsin, 11.5; Minnesota, 11.7; Iowa, 11.5; Missouri, 12.1; Kansas, 17; Nebraska, 13.5; South Dakota, 12.5; North Dakota, 12.2; Washington, 18.4; Oregon, 15.7; California, 12.8.

The average yield of oats is 24.3 bush-

The average of the estimated state yields of rye is 12.7 bushels.

Preparing Bees for Winter.

A Minnesota apiarian advises plenty of honey, young queens and a number of bees as the greatest considerations. Where the hives do not contain at least twenty pounds of sealed stores the bees should be fed sugar sirup up to that weight. The feeding should be done as early as possible, so as to be well sealed before cold weather. The American They tried to fix the murder on me, but Bee Journal indorses the foregoing and emphasizes "strong colonies, with plenty of healthful stores, as important essentials in safe wintering of bees.'

WINTER RATIONS FOR EGGS.

Director Gilbert, of the Canadian Station at Ottawa, Makes a Report. Notwithstanding all that has been problem, Director A. G. Gilbert, of the Ottawa station, makes a report as follows: Answer can best be given by describing the rations fed last winter and ing ration fed during the winter was To the Circuit Court for the County of Washtenaw, in Chancery: composed of:

Pounds. Ounces. Clover hay, steamed and mixed in liberal quantity.

Salt, very small quantity. Coarse sand and fine ground oyster shells mixed, about three handfuls.

The whole was mixed with boiling water. Boiled potatoes and turnips were occasionally substituted for the clover hay, for variety in diet is beneficial. The hens did not eat the scalded clover hay when exposed to them by itself, but readily did so when mixed in the soft

To prevent egg eating, which follows the laying of eggs with soft shells. 6. By the regular feeding of meat and keeping the fowls in active exercise to prevent feather eating, generally caused by the omission of both. 7. To prevent the acquiring of the bad practices named, the cure being very difficult, 8. To furnish the hens as nearly as possible with what they can pick up for themselves when running at large outside, such as insects in the shape of ground meat, grit (to aid digestion) in the shape of gravel and broken oyster shells, lime in the shape of ground oyster shells, green stuff in the shape of clover hay (steamed) cut short and mixed in soft feed, carrots, cabbage, turnips, etc.

At noon, when grain was given, oats were fed in small quantity. For the afternoon ration wheat was given, with barley occasionally mixed in equal quantity. Vegetables, such as carrots, mangels and turnips, were kept always on the floor of the pens. Very little cab-bage was fed during the winter. The rations, as aforementioned, were fed to the following stock in the main build-

Pullets. Hens. Plymouth Rocks..... Brahmas
Langshans
Buff Cochins Among this stock will be noticed numerous hens, some of them old hens, so called because they were over two years and kept for breeders and sitters during the coming season. As there was no alternative, they were placed with the pullets, a practice to be when possible, for the reason that the ration which would go to eggs in the pullets would likely make the hens too fat to lay. The effect in eggs of the rations on the pullets and hens is given

Wyandotte pullets...... Wyandotte hens..... Bufi Cochin hens..... 9 Houdan hens .. It may be said that the showing is not a good one for the number of stock, but it must be borne in mind that the feeding was only experimental. The result. however, is striking proof of the great value of pullets over old hens as revenue producers under the same conditions as to housing, care and feeding. The conclusions to be arrived at from the experiments are: 1. That no hen should be kept over two years. 2. No soft shelled eggs were laid by the pullets, showing that they are not so likely to lay such eggs as the old stock; that the daily mixing of coarse sand, fine gravel and sifted oyster shells in small quantities has a preventive tendency. 3. That no eggs nor feathers having been eaten to date of writing, a regular supply of ground meat mixed in soft feed is to be recommended. 4. A small quantity of salt was mixed daily in the hot morning ration, but as it created looseness its use was given up. 5. The feeding of vege tables in generous quantity had the effect of keeping the hens in excellent condition. 6. Scattering the grain food among the chaff and straw always on the floors of pens kept the fowls active. This grain food should not be fed in too great quantity.

THE YEAR AT ST. ANDREW'S.

The Anniversary Sermon Which Indicates the Prosperity of the Church.

Another year, dear friends, of joint Master's service has come to a close, and today its history lies before us. If we would read this history wisely, we shall read it humbly; for while it is fitted to encourage us, it should not fail also to admonish us.

It is a solemn and impressive fact that these annual records must ever begin with a roll of the dead. Every year there are vacant places in our ranks which the year before were filled. Every year there are those of our number to whom the Advent summons comes for the last time.

On the 11th of January, Mr. William Louis T. Hessler and family will F. Pardon was stricken down in early manhood. Though he had not been long in our midst, those of us who Walter Mack helped to swell the knew him had learned to esteem him delegation of business men that highly, and readily discerned in him the strong and noble character which had won for him the regard and admiration of his life-long friends.

On the 22nd of February, Mr. Charles H. Richmond was called to his rest after a long life of many labors. Mr. Richmond had been a resident of this community for more than a generation, and during all that time he was an active and zealous member of this church and parish. He had held many positions of responsibility and honor entrusted to him by his business and political associates, and during almost his entire connection with this parish he was a member of its vestry. In all Mrs. C. G. Darling entertained these positions and relations, as well Mrs. J. N. Payne and children, of as in his more private life, Mr. Richmond was ever found to be a man of the strictest integrity and uprightness. He knew no way to gain his ends but Wednesday, to purchase plate glass the way of truth and honesty. He was and other things for the front of his a devoted and loyal churchman, and those who were associated with him in the work will never forget the services which he rendered in connection with the erection of the several buildings which are now the property of the parish. At the time of his death, he was senior warden of the parish, registrar of the diocese, president of one of our city banks, and one of the state commissioners to the Columbian state commissioners to the Columbian Exhibition. The community placed Ladies' Aid Society Woman's Auxiliary. full confidence in him, and his pure and spotless life proved the wisdom of that confidence.

And, therefore, I am most grateful for the work of these two societies in the cause of missions, grateful not only for the service which they are rendering to that cause, but grateful also for the service which they are rendering to us, in helping to keep alive in our midst the missionary spirit, which is the Gospel spirit, which is the life and soul of our religion. And in this connection, and finally,

I wish to thank the subscribers to the fund for missions and charities, through whose generous offerings our Sunday school and parochial missions are maintained and the obligations of the parish to diocesan, domestic, and foreign missions are met. I thank these subscribers, one and all, men, women, and children, for nobly maintaining this fund. I am encouraged and cheered by this proof of a large, 88,012 60 intelligent, and living grasp of the FREDERICK KRAUSE Gospel's meaning. For many of you, ny friends, if not for all of you, it costs some sacrifice to make these offerings; but that it is which makes them a blessing to you no less than to those who receive them. With all our goodly possessions in material things, with all our growth in numbers, with all our zeal in parochial activity, for which God be praised, we have also to be more deeply thankful that there is among us, manifesting itself in diverse ways, the spirit of true religion, the hope of love, the courage of faith, and the power of consecration. May that spirit, that hope and courage and power grow and ever grow in all our hearts.

BALED HAY.

Views of a Californian with a Half Century's Experience on the Subject.

A correspondent of The Country Gentleman who has had fifty years' experience in various modes of making hay advocates baling it as both economical and convenient. He considers that there is a vast amount of unnecessary labor and cost in making hay stacks twenty feet high, as done with machine pitchers, horses, hoisting forks, rakes, carriers and pulleys, and also with hay loaders. He says:

I am of the opinion that four ton stacks, the hay drawn around them with a horse rake and the stacks protected with waterproof caps, form an cconomical method of stacking hay for baling, as one man can make a three or four ton stack while a boy draws the loose hay to it with a horse rake, leaving it on any side convenient for pitching on the stack. If the weather is threatening, a small stack can be made in an hour or two without wagons or costly machinery, and if the hay is a little damp it will sweat in the small stacks without material damage and get ready for baling.

By stacking in small stacks with few men and little machinery except horse rakes much drawing and time are saved—as experience taught me long ago-and the baling machine can be moved from one small stack to another while a single load of hay could be drawn and pitched on a large stack. Again, if rain threatens, a small stack can be quickly made or rounded up and secured with a waterproof cap without damage. Hay can probably be secured in the field as suggested at less than half the cost of putting in large stacks with costly machinery, and the barns or hay lofts will contain three or four times as much hay in bales as could be put into them loose, making saving in storage space as well as drawing twice as much at a load in bales without any hay racks.

Again, the convenience of bales for feeding is worth considering. The hay is taken from the end of the bale with the hands, when the baling wire is cut, in a layer only a few inches thick, the hay left in the bale remaining close as the press left it, and so on till the bale is all used, the wires being easily cut. Use from the bale a few pounds at a time; the hay retains its fresh color and quality far better than when loose. Furthermore, if other work is pressing, the hay can remain in small stacks till light frosts occur, when the baling can be done without hindering plowing or any other urgent work. Waterproof caps for small stacks or cocks can be obtained at little cost or made on the farm in a short time.

Husking Corn.

Husking corn ought to begin as soon crib. Take as many sacks as will make a load when filled and husk in a bushel basket. Husk nine shocks, and make two bundles of fodder of each shock, ad-The New England Homestead: Use the old band to tie one bundle tom with boards, and you can load with out · lifting over the box. The crib should have two doors, each half way from center to end, and at a height to be conveniently reached from the wagon. By emptying one sack at a time you can unload in short order. Assort the corn as it is husked, leaving the small corn in heaps to be gathered and cribbed separately. When the crib is full to the doors load the corn loose in the wagon box and shovel out with a scoop. Marketing the corn depends on locality. Here in northeastern Ohio we think it more profitable to sell it at 30 cents per bushel basket of ears than to feed it for pork or beef at present prices. If near city market two-thirds corn and one-third oats ground and fed to milk cows for butter or milk would be very profitable. Some farmers ensile their corn, but my experience is that dry fodder, with root crops, is less expensive and gives equally good results.

Successful Wheat Growing.

A recent essayist at a farmers' meeting, who believes that good farming most valuable properties of the food pays, summed it all by giving these points, which, if followed up, are sure to lead to success in wheat culture: 1. The soil must be well drained. 2. The best soil for wheat is a clayey loam containing lime. 3. Wheat likes a soft seed bed with a compact bottom. 4. Clover sod turned early makes such a bed. 5. Test at least one new variety each year; change your seed every three years. 6. The best seed is plump, heavy, oily and clean. 7. About two inches is the best depth for sowing the seed. 8. The drill puts in the seed cheaper and better than broadcasting. 9. From the middle of September to the middle of October is the best time for sowing. 10. If drilled, five pecks of seed per acre; if broadcast, two bushels. 11. One heavy rolling after seeding does much good. 12. If the growing season is dry, try sowing

When Bees Begin to Breed.

In reply to the query, "When should bees begin to breed in the spring?" asked in The American Bee Journal, Mrs. L. Harrison said: "The bees are the best judges of the time. Keep your bees strong. Give them food if they are short of stores and leave the rest to them.' Professor A. J. Cook says: "As soon as the pollen is in the flowers. In some seasons this is too early. On the average I find bees should be out and rearing brood as soon as they begin to collect." Mr. Mahon answered: "That would depend upon climate and circumstances. would not care to have them breed before the spring is sufficiently advanced

FARM LABOR.

Wages Prevailing During the Period Between 1866 and 1892.

A miscellaneous report of the department of agriculture furnishes interesting notes and tabulated data on investigations of wages at nine different times during a period of twenty-six years (1866 to 1892) on the supply of labor in the different states and localities and on wages in earlier years.

Beginning when labor was in demand to repair the wastes of war, the average rates were high, gradually declining, finding lowest level in 1879, then rising to a normal status, which has been maintained with wonderful uniformity during the last ten years. While farmers have suffered from low prices of certain products they have been unable to reduce the rate of wages. It might be supposed that the depression in agriculture, of which so much has been said and written, would be attended with a decline in the rate of compensation paid for labor. This has not taken place. The demand is well sustained and wages have not declined. Many a farmer complains that labor costs too much; that values of products do not warrant the rates demanded, and yet he must have it, and promptly makes the engagement.

The returns give a true explanation of the apparent anomaly of low prices and high wages. There is a difference in employers. Some are progressive, increase the fertility of their lands, use the best methods and implements, employ labor, pay good wages and make money. Others are less enterprising, diligent or progressive, and make small profit or none at all. The returns are full of indications that the present is a crucial test of the individual farmers. They teach the necessity of progress in agriculture, and especially a facility for prompt adaptation of current effort to changing condi-

It is said that a certain analysis of all the data collected concerning farm wages from 1840 to 1865, in comparison with It results of the more recent investigations, will show that in fifty years the compensation of farm labor has very nearly

In comparison with other countries American farm labor stands first in the rate of compensation. The present rate of $282 per annum for labor of the Caucasian race can scarcely be approached by any country, unless by Australia. Current estimates for other countries have been frequently quoted about as follows: Great Britain, $150; France, $125; Holland, $100; Germany, $90; Russia, $60; Italy, $50, and India, $30. The present rate can only be maintained by keeping up the fertility of the soil, utilizing the best results of invention and skill in implements and machinery, advancing the status of practical agriculture, supplying all domestic demands for all required products and seeking foreign markets for the surplus.

Poultry for Eggs.

A farmer who lives so far from any large market that he finds it unprofitable to keep fowls for any purpose except eggs, and therefore takes great care as it will do to crib in a well slatted in selecting the best breeds for eggs and feeding them properly, says: "I have tried various kinds, but find that the Black Spanish or White Leghorn is the million more p best fowl for laying of any I have ever vises a farmer who writes as follows in tried. My preference is the White Leghorn, as their flesh is superior to the Spanish for table use. "I feed my hens in the morning on cornmeal, wet with boiling hot water, and in the afternoon a mess of buckwheat or wheat, occasionally giving a mess of meat, cabbage and other vegetables chopped fine. I allow my hens to have plenty of exercise in the open air when the weather is fine, always keeping keeping fresh water where they can have access to it. Hens should be provided with a comfortable place to roost and shelter to protect them from the storms and blasts, and, with suitable food and plenty of it, hens pay as well as anything one can keep upon the Land Plaster for Stables.

The employment of land plaster in stables is urged for two purposes; it not only deodorizes and disinfects the stable, thereby contributing to the health of attendants and animals, but it prevents the escape and going to waste of the consumed by the stock. In a recent plea to farmers to try land plaster from one pint to one quart daily for each animal, Hoard's Dairyman says: "If its affinity for ammonia or nitrogen is so strong that it will gather this valuable fertilizer from the atmosphere, the dews and rains, how invaluable must it be in stables to take up and hold the same volatile element!"

PNEUMATIC TIRES.

Opinions as to Their Use on Buggies and Other Light Driving Vehicles.

The question is asked in The Rural New Yorker, "Is it probable that the rubber tires that have proved so successful on trotting sulkies will come into immediate use on buggies or other light driving vehicles?" Of six carriage and wagon manufacturing companies which reply to this question one only declines to express any opinion; the remaining five appear to be substantially of the opinion expressed by one company that "the pneumatic wheels so popular on speeding sulkies will never become popular on driving vehicles until they have undergone many changes." The reasons given in this instance are that "the pneumatic rubber tire at present is very easily punctured and very difficult to repair. None of them will retain a uniform high pressure of air longer than three or four days. They give the best results on wheels twenty-eight inches in diameter. On larger wheels the column of air is lengthened of course, and requires a higher pressure to give the necessary firmness to the tread. The danger of puncture, the trouble in keeping them inflated and the annoyance of repairing punctured tires must necessarily exclude them from general use on any vehicle for road

One firm writes: "We have serious doubts whether the pneumatic rubber tires can ever be successfully used on a buggy intended for general purposes, for the reason that the tires are too easily punctured and damaged. Unless the liability to puncture and some other features can be successfully overcome we have serious doubts whether the pneumatic rubber tires will be the kind used for the bicycle in the future, though they may be used by racing men and others who will take unusual care of the wheels and guard against punc ture in the tires. We cannot see, however, why the ball bearing may not be judiciously applied to light vehicles and so lighten the draft."

Another, while commending pneumatic tires for sulkies, thinks something else must be got up for road business and suggests as a suitable tire iron outside with rubber under it; the iron to stand the wear of rough roads and the rubber to give elasticity.

Still another company thinks pneumatic tires on sulkies are not a success on a heavy or muddy track, and that they cannot take the place of the present wheels, because, first, their height is against them for carriages, and were they made higher their strength would be very much impaired; second, in muddy roads they certainly would be useless. The belief is expressed, however, that some smart manufacturing com pany will produce a wood carriage wheel with rubber tire and ball bearings that will be the coming wheel for all ve-

Apple Butter.

A good article of apple butter can be made without cider, but where cider can be easily obtained it is to be preferred on account of requiring less labor. With cider, you have first to boil it down to something less than half its volume and then put the prepared apples into a large brass or copper kettle and fill up with the boiled cider and boil very slowly over a low fire of coals until the apples are thoroughly cooked through. Constant stirring is necessary. and must not be neglected as long as the kettle is over the fire. This is best done with a wooden paddle set at right angles on the end of a stick long enough for the one using it to stand back a comfortable distance from the fire, and with the wooden blade keep the contents of the kettle in motion until the work is done The cider should be new and unfermented, and, although not absolutely necessary, it will be better if made from sweet apples

When cider cannot be conveniently obtained sweet apples may be boiled in water until they are soft and pulpy, then dip into a bag and strain out the juice by pressing the pulp. The juice may then be boiled down to the same consistency as in the case of the cider and used in the same manner. Where sweet apples can be had, many prefer this to ordinary cider, but the boiling of the fruit and pressing out the juice make additional work. Apple butter for winter use should be made as late in the season as is convenient, otherwise it is liable to ferment and require scalding.

the Hatch (Mass.) experiment station No. 18. The experiment seems to indicate the correctness of the opinion heretofore given that the so called "special corn fertilizers" contain too much phosphoric acid and too little potash. In ket price, writes a New Jersey correbreaking up ordinary sod land for corn, if fertilizers only are to be used. Mr. Brooks, agriculturist of the station, recommends to apply those which are rich Unsurpassed for healthfulness of location in potash. Use material which will supply 80 to 100 pounds of actual potash, from 25 to 30 pounds of phosphoric acid and from 15 to 20 pounds of nitrogen per acre. If "special corn fertilizer" is to be used apply only a moderate quantity, say 400 to 500 pounds per acre, and use with it about 125 pounds of muriate of potash. He believes this combination will produce as good a crop as 800 to 1,000 pounds of "corn fertilizer," and will cost considerably less. But for hawks, owls and other enehe describes as follows:

Take an ordinary bird cage and place cage on top of a stake about three feet high near the outskirts of the poultry yard, or near some dead tree on which hawks usually perch. Next drive three or four stakes near the cage, the tops of a portion thereof being a little abov the top of the cage and the residu about level with the bottom. Now place a steel trap that is sufficiently large to catch high on the foot of the hawk (an ordinary rat trap is too small) on top of each stake and you are ready for business. When a hawk or owl becomes trapped others will be attracted. and thus two or more can frequently be taken. Hence the necessity for employing several traps, preferably about four. In lieu of the bird cage a cage constructed of twine, knit like a seine and properly supported by a frame and bottom board, may be employed. I used one of this kind and found it very effective, taking in a short time quite a number of hawks. I lost a large hawk by reason of the trap (a rat trap) being too small, capturing as a trophy a single toe only that was wrung off and left in the

A chicken would doubtless be more restless, and as a result would attract the attention of hawks sooner and consequently answer a better purpose. Two or more chickens may be used. All the material employed in constructing the cage, stakes, etc., should, as far as practicable, be of a natural color, say a lead color. Whether partridges or chickens be employed as a bait they must be properly provided with food and water For foxes, minks, weasels, etc., the cage and traps should be placed on the ground. I have never experimented to see how placing on the ground would the valve of the windpipe as far as it will answer for hawks, owls, etc.

A Theory Concerning Wheat Growth. An interesting theory has been published by Professor Bidard, secretary of the Central Agricultural society of Seine, France. He divides the stages of wheat growth into the following periods: Germination, which will take place at a temperature of 40 to 45 degs. The rudimentary spike formed at germination is protected by a sheath of five believe, an absolute preventive for this leaves, and the development of these trouble, viz., keep the chickens on dry leaves and the stalk will take a temperature of up to 60 degs. to carry it through. The really critical period of enemies of the poultry yard." wheat growth is the stage of fecundation. M. Bidard maintains that a temperature of at least 70 degs. is necessary for the lateral opening of the anthers sufficiently wide to allow the absorption of the pollen, or fine dust that consummates the act of fecundation.

If the temperature falls below 70 degs. and especially if it comes on to rain, the anthers will not open, and should the unfavorable conditions be maintained for a little time a large number of the spikes will abort and there will be no fertilization. If the temperature is favorable the fertilization is completed in a few minutes at most, and that process once accomplished, the harvest is pretty certain, as the next stage of maturing monia the sample was exceptionally may be reckoned upon even though the weather may be far from propitious. By watching at the critical period a careful observer may form a very shrewd guess from the amount of bloom that has been of a harvest is likely to follow.

Splitting and Setting Posts.

Meehan, in his Illustrated Monthly reminds readers that it is the attempt to split a thing against the grain which makes splitting difficult. Those who make hoops for barrels split the pole in order to make them, but they do not commence with the top or slender portion of the pole and split downward. They could not do this; but by taking the thicker end and working from the thick to the thin no trouble is found—the pole splits easily. Also in cutting wood, the expert axman knows that he gets along nicely by starting at the thickest end. Still further, this hint can be usefully applied in planting fence posts. While the sap of a tree ascends easily by following the forked upward channels it cannot so easily descend. By planting a post, therefore, upside down-that is to say in a contrary direction to which drawn upward nearly as easily as when An inverted post, therefore, will last nearly double the time without rotting that one will do set without regard to this principle.

GAPES IN CHICKENS.

A Plan for Catching Hawks, Owls and Some Approved Methods of Combating This Troublesome Disease.

A World correspondent writes: "I have mies comparative peace would reign in never met a poultry keeper yet who was the poultry yard A North Carolina not interested in gapes and couldn't name correspondent of the New York World a new remedy for them. There are of has devised a plan for protecting his course several approved methods of compoultry and useful birds as well which bating this trouble. That these still continue to be recommended is pretty good evidence that, in some cases at therein a chicken, preferably a white least, they prove effective. As gapes one, about half grown. Then place the will be to the fore now and for some time to come among the young chickens, I will mention a few of these remedies.

"One authority says: If cases occur, at once put fluid carbolate, camphor or lime in the water. If there are many cases place the chicks in a cold pit (garden frame) and fumigate with vapor of carbolic acid till they are nearly suffo-cated by the fumes. Care must be taken to liberate the chicks at the right moment or death will ensue, but if this is well done it is an effectual cure.

"Stoddard says that camphor has been used with success given in the form of a pea, and that alum and sulphur in the form of fine powder blown down the throat will destroy the worms. Lime in the air will also effect the purpose, and may be applied by putting the chickens into a box covered with fine muslin and sifting fine lime through this, but not so fast as to smother the chickens.

"Another remedy is spirits of turpentine, a few drops at a time. By some persons a diet of crushed corn, soaked in alum water or kerosene, is considered good. This last remedy does not appear at all reasonable to me. Gapes are caused, as every poultry keeper is likely to learn some time in the course of his experience, by small red worms in the windpipe, which obstruct the passage, so that finally the chick chokes and dies. To remove the cause is to remove the disease, and the chicken, if not too much weakened, will recover. "For a few chickens, I think the feather treatment ought undoubtedly to be called the best and surest cure. This consists in stripping the feather from a quill five or six inches long to within about an inch of the top, then double this portion over. Wet this with turpentine a little diluted with water, or with a mixture of twenty drops carbolic acid to one ounce glycerin. Push the feather down gently through go; then draw it up, at the same time twisting it quickly around. If you have performed the operation dexterously, the worms, or a part of them, will come up with the feather. It may be necessary to repeat the process in order to get the worms all out. Of course this remedy is somewhat severe on the chicken, if not skillfully and gently done, and it cannot be applied to large flocks because it requires too much time. There is, I ground and keep the yard and houses clean. Wet and filth are the greatest

A New Era for the History of Guano. When the deposits on the rocky islands off the coast of Peru were first discovered, the shipments of guano were of high quality, the average percentage of ammonia ranging from 15.98 per cent. in the lowest sample to 18.94 per cent. in the highest. But there came a change, and as the old deposits began to be worked out and newer ones took their place there came also a reduction in the quality, and instead of 15 per cent. to 18 per cent. of ammonia and 24 per cent. of phosphates, many of the shipments went far below these figures, and where there was nitrogen equal to 10 per cent. of amgood. There are now, however, says the Mark Lane Express, indications of a revival of the old guano days. Since the Peruvian corporation took the matter in hand a search has been made among the properly formed on the heads what sort thousands of rocky islands which exist on the west coast of Peru, where the birds have their breeding grounds, and a large deposit of high class guano has been found. As this has been found in the rainless zone and has had time to get into that mature friableness which was such a characteristic of the earlier shipments, the discovery is a valuable one. as the shipments which have arrived in Europe prove. Several samples have been taken, and these show an analysis from 12 to 13 per cent. of ammonia, one sample showing as high as 15 per cent.

There can be no doubt but that these shipments mark the beginning of a new era in the history of guano, and one which will be marked once again by the greater use of that manure.

Bean Weevils.

The weevil of the bean bug deposits its eggs in the young beans soon after they have formed, puncturing through the pod. The grubs or larvæ change the tree grows-moisture will not be into beetles or weevils in the beans and live over winter in them. Vick says the post is planted in the other direction. that the best way to manage is to place the beans in a close box or cask and then introduce into it a cup containing a small quantity of bisulphide of carbon, the fumes of which, in a few hours, will destroy the insects. As this substance is highly inflammable, one should not go near it with a lamp or candle.
