Maccabee Banquet.

Tuesday evening was the second anniversary of the institution of Arbor Hive, No. 113, L. O. T. M., and as the hive has been very prosperous since its foundation it was thought by the ladies that it would be well to celebrate the event in a fitting manner. Accordingly it was decided to have a banquet, enlivened with a fine literary and musical program. For the past two weeks the ladies had been very busy in complet-New York City, speaks every even- ing the arrangements and when the hall was opened last evening everything was in readiness for the enjoyment of the evening. #### A Credit to Ann Arbor.

When any individual or firm or corporation which by reason of active operations or extraordinary enterprise adds to the prosperity of our city and bestows a direct benefit on the public we consder it our duty to give the fact or event the publicity which it deserves. For this reason we desire to direct attention to Mack & Schmid and their remarkable transactions this fall. For 40 years connected with the business interests of this city the public has learned to know them for what they Proceedings of the Board of Public Works. of the county. Pushing themselves to the top by their progressive and aggressive methods they have done more to legitimatize the dry goods business and bring themselves into favor with the saving people who live and shop in this county than any other concern in the state. They have gained the confidence and good will of the public, their every effort being directed toward maintaining the highest degree of excellence in their business.

But, great as has been their many triumphs in merchandizing, especially the property of A. L. Noble, John R. in the past two or three years, during which their business has been conducted south side of Volland street, in front upon metropolitan lines, their business ventures this fall have been the most Schmidt, Mrs. Clarissa Johnston, Mrs. remarkable of their entire business career, the most gratifying feature being that the public is sharing in their

In underwear, notions, trim-'Little Deeds of Kindness' made an mings, blankets and shawls there were the same sweeping reductions throughout the house. Having finished our inspection of the first floor, our attention was next directed to their cloak department, a splendid room 24 x 100 feet. Whatever surprises we found on the first floor in the way of quality and quantity of goods and value of bargains, they were entirely eclipsed here, and here we were taught an object lesson demonstrating the power of ready money, and how it was possible for Mack and Schmid to give such splendid bargains. Their buyer for this department was negotiating for the entire product of an eastern cloak house, the outcome of which was that the entire stock was bought at 50c on the dollar of the manufacturer's cost. As an example of what this means, a garment, the manufacturer's price of which was $20 and which would retail for $25, was bought for $10 and sold for $11.25. Another, the manufacturer's price $26, would sell for $33, bought for $13 and sold for $15. Elegant imported novelties which if purchased at the regular price would put them out of the reach of ordinary mortals, when bought for 50c on the dollar, makes them possible for all. It is a marvellous display in extent and character of goods and prices and has well earned for them the title of "The Bargain Givers" and "Price Makers of the County."

it is easy to steal or ring watches from the pocket. The thief gets the watch in one hand, the chain in the other and gives a short, quick jerk—the ring slips off the watch stem, and away goes the watch, leaving the victim only the chain.

This idea stopped that little game:

The bow has a groove on each end. A collar runs down inside the pendant (stem) and fits into the grooves, firmly locking the bow to the pendant, so that it cannot be pulled or twisted off.

It is a very simple matter to start a woman's club. In your small community even one could flourish. Talk to two or three of your friends about it; then appoint a meeting on some afternoon in your parlor to discuss the matter more fully. Let your friends bring their friends, and have somebody the spokesman to describe the object of the meeting. Decide whether your club shall be for study or to take up some work in the community or elsewhere that attracts the members. Somebody will surely be conversant with some woman's club, to some member of which an application may be made for rules for membership and schedule of work. These can be used merely as models to work away from, according to the needs and wishes of the company which will make up the new club. As to its name, if it is the initial woman's club of the village, and it presumably is, let it take the name of the place for its title, as the Blankville Woman's club. Mrs. C. E. Brown, West Orange, N. J., the president of the Federation of Women's Clubs, would be pleased undoubtedly to give further hints and suggestions in the matter.—Exchange. Sex and Salary.

There are reported to be 185 male teachers in the public schools of Boston and 1,372 women. The average salary of the men per month is $246.06, and the average salary per month of the women is $70.69.

To what extent the larger salary is a pure bonus to the male sex is an interesting question. Doubtless the fact that many of the higher salaried posts are held by men accounts for more or less of this disparity, but it by no means accounts for all,

So far as a man receives higher remuneration than a woman can secure for the same labor this excess is a pure bonus handed over on account of sex.

Of course old (but not venerable) custom sanctions the payment to women of less for the same labor and service than is paid to men, but this is an age when equal rights are supposed to be maintained, and fair play to all is supposed to rule.

Why are women still paid less for the same work than men receive? Who knows?-Boston Globe.

New York Woman's Press Club.

Lotta was elected a member of the Woman's Press club by acclamation at its first meeting of the season. This is the first time in the history of the club that a member has been so elected. Twelve names of applicants for membership were handed in by the chairman of the executive committee. Among them were several members of Sorosis and others prominent in literature. Touching tributes were given to the memory of Mrs. Lucy Hooper and to the deceased members of the club-Mrs. Margaret Manton Merrill, Miss Fanny Palmer Tinker and Miss Eleanor Booker. There was a large, enthusiastic meeting, and the affairs of the club seem to be in a most promising condition.—New York Letter.

A Pretty Girl Station Agent.

Passengers over the Rumford Falls and Buckfield road always noticed upon the platform at East Peru a plump and pretty girl who wears the regalia of the station agent. She wears a cap with gold lace and a brass shield, and on the shield is "Station Agent." This is Miss Lillie Howard, and she has had charge of the station at East Peru for some time. She is attentive to her duties. The Steve Crane and family now occupy trainmen always have a smile and a age Lake.

Two Women Elected.

The September election for members of the board of education at Grand Rapids, one great center for furniture making in this country, resulted in the choice of two of the four women who were nominated. Dr. Louise Andrus received every vote in her ward except two.

Mrs. R. L. Andrews was elected from the Fourth ward in place of an admirable trustee, Mr. G. W. Thompson, whose business affairs would not admit of accepting a re-election. Much interest was shown in the women's vote, but no womday, on her way to visit her daughter an's ballot was challenged.—Grand Rapids Dispatch.

AN INTERESTING SKETCH.

AN INTERESTING SKETCH.

Nothing appeals so strongly to a mother's affection as her daughter just budding into womanhood. Following is an instance: "Our daughter, Blanche, now 15 years of age, had been terribly afflicted with nervousness, and had lost the entire use of her right arm. She was in such a condition that we had to keep her from school and abandon her music lessons. In fact, we feared St. Vitus dance, and are positive but for an invaluable remedy she would have had that terrible affliction. We had employed phy sicians, but she received no benetit from them. The first of last August she weighed but 75 pounds, and although she has taken only three bottles of Nervine she now weighs 106 pounds; her nervousness and symptoms of St. Vitus dance are entirely gone, she attends school regularly, and studies with comfort and ease. She has recovered complete use of her arm, her appetite is splendid, and no money could procure for our daughter the health Dr. Miles' Nervine has brought her.

When my brother recommended the remedy I had no faith in patent medicines, and would not listen to him, but as a last resort he sent us a bottle, we began giving it to Blanche, and the effect was almost immediate."—Mrs. R. An Uncommon Belt.

Miss Lily Dix wears the most beautiful and uncommon belt of any lady in St. Louis. It is of Russian make and was brought her from St. Petersburg by a wealthy relative. The belt is woven of gold so finely drawn that it has the flexibility of ribbon. The buckle is of rarely beautiful mello work, studded with gemlike incrustations, and it is fastened by thrusting a jeweled dagger, attached to the buckle by a chain, through the clasp. It is a thing of beauty, and yet, like most elegant ornaments, very unobtrusive.-St. Louis Exchange.

A Woman's Apartment House. How urgent the want that the woman's apartment house, for which Mrs. Candace Wheeler and Miss Janet Lewis have labored unceasingly, is going to supply may be gathered from the statement that over 100 applications are already filed for the 140 rooms and apartments that the building will afford. The plans are drawn, contracts awarded, and ground is to be broken very soon, the promoters hoping to open the establish ment early next autumn.-New York

RACING A TORNADO.

It was some time in July. The weather and been pretty hot, and it was just the sort of a day for breeding a tornado. I was ern Kansas. The superintendent wired me er.

quickly as possible and started for Peterstown, taking it rather easily, because the track wasn't in condition to stand fast run-Chinese embassy, in which a portrait is ning well. I was an hour out from my starting place and had gone 16 miles per-haps, when I noticed some queer looking clouds on the western horizon.

The day was extremely sultry, and there was a curious sort of a glare over the landscape, which made it look sort of feverish. I can't think of a better word for describing it. There was something unnatural about the appearance of everything. My fireman was a boy who had been brought up in that region, and he said that it looked like a tornado coming. He ought to have been a good judge of the symptoms be-cause the whole of his family, together with all their property and live stock, had been wiped out by such a "twister," as they called 'em, when he was hardly old enough to toddle.

By the time we had gone maybe eight or nine miles farther a dense bank of clouds had spread around toward the southwest. It was black as ink, but beneath it was a blank streak of white. I had never seen anything that looked quite like it before. As I looked at it, the bank rose higher, and presently I saw something like a sharp point of cloud project itself downward from the black mass. All this time there was no thunder nor lightning, but only a look about the sky that was dreadful to see, because it was so unnaturallike. It seemed as if something awful was going to happen. It was the boy who called my attention to the pointed cloud, and he said it was a tornado beginning.

'Then we'll run away from it, I guess," said I, pulling the throttle wide open. But the boy said nothing—only watched the royal headdress put on in place of the clouds in the distance.

Now and then when I could take my eye off the cloud I looked at the boy, but he only sat silent in the cab, staring at the great pegtop with starting eyeballs and white lips. Finally I said:

"Do you think we are going so escape it?" "We are right in its track," he said, without looking at me.

You see, we were running in an air line steam I had on, would have carried us out of the way

The boy shoveled more coal on. He had already done so three or four times since the strange cloud was sighted. But it was no use. The engine was doing its best, and she wasn't capable of more than about 38 miles an hour.

"It's gaining on us," I said. "How fast does such a thing as that travel?"

"About a hundred miles an hour," replied the boy, white as a sheet.

If that had been true, I would not be here to tell the story. I have since learned that 80 miles an hour is supposed to be the best a tornado can do. My belief is that this one was going at about 60 miles. Anyway, it wasn't more than six or seven miles dis tant by this time and gaining on us rapidly. If my reckoning was correct, it would catch us in a little more than 20 minutes. The way I calculated it was that the great pegtop was moving at the rate of three miles to our two.

It was the most frightful spectacle to look at that can possibly be imagined. To me it seemed to be a monstrous giant, pursuing us with an evil intention to destroy. Now and then its blackness would be trans formed into a dark green, and it was con-stantly lighted up by flashes, as if it were an immense balloon illuminated from within. It appeared to whirl round with inconceivable rapidity, and from it came a sound across the prairie as of bellowing, with a voice so awful that the rumbling of the locomotive was lost in it. Of the destruction it was accomplishing I could get no notion from my point of view. Fortunately there were few settlements in that part of the country, but as we passed two or three small hamlets at full speed I could see the people running about trying to find some place of safety.

The boy staggered at my side—the rockone's feet-and clutched my arm. I stooped my head, and he yelled into my ear the words, "Make the bend."

I knew what he meant on the instant. Less than 10 miles ahead of us was a bridge over a river, after crossing which the road turned abruptly southward. It was a freak railway, anyhow, and its zigzags were intended to pass through as many supposed centers of future population as possible. The only long strength of it in a straight line was just where we got caught by the tornado. If we could get to the bend ahead of the monster, we might run out of its Fourth regiment of Hungarian hus-

As you may well imagine, I had no op portunity to consider the plan calmly and in detail, but it struck me like a flash. was a race for life sure enough. If that engine never did her 40 miles an hour before, I think she must have done that and more, too, then. With the great funnel cloud racing on behind us, steadily approaching, we tore over the rails.

Six miles passed as well as I could esti-mate, and the monster was only about four miles behind. Three miles more, and it lessened the distance by a mile at least. But we were near the river. A minute later, and we were crossing the bridge. No time then to heed the warning that "trains must run slowly over this stream" in obe dience to the signpost.

We flew around the curve and dashed southward, just in time to see the mighty balloon pass by with a whirl and a roar, as if all the demons in the infernal regions were let loose. We could not make out anything very distinctly, the sky being darkened and the air filled with dust, but we knew that we were safe. A few min utes later the clouds rolled away, and every thing was as quiet and peaceful as before the storm. We ran back to the bridge, but it wasn't there. It was clean gone. The road was so badly torn up, the track for considerable distances being twisted and broken to pieces, that the expense of re-pairing it nearly bankrupted the company. Eleven people lost their lives by that to nado, which afforded me an experience which I would not repeat for all the money in the world.-Exchange.

JOHN WENT BACK.

Two fertile farms lay side by side on the road between the village of Bridgetown (now Mount Holly) and Burlington in the year 1775. Reuben Most and John Grigg were still wont to consult one another concerning the affairs of their respective farms.

So by the same process Reuben Most and John Grigg found themselves when the necessity arose shouldering Continental muskets together.

It must not be supposed, for sooth, that Reuben and John were childless and alone simply because no mention has yet been made of anything to the contrary. Patty Most was as fair an 18year-old slip of girl as one would care to feast his eyes upon.

Reuben and John had many years ago long before the birth of Patty, confided to one another the hope that one should be given a son, to the other a daughter, and that the lifelong friendship of the fathers should find even a stronger tie in the union of their offspring.

When, shortly after the girl was born, therefore, John's buxom spouse duly presented him with an heir, the two old friends renewed their pledges over many a giant mug of home brewed ale.

At the period when the tale begins Patty Most was a demure little country beauty a trifle over 18 years of age, and John, Jr., was a sturdy youth a month younger. Up to this time there had been but small need for the manifestation of their fathers' desire concerning a marriage between them.

On the evening before the departure of the men young John walked down the cowpath, jumped the boundary fence between his father's and Reuben's lands, and strode up through the meadows to his sweetheart's home. The parting with her was John's worst trial. Even this, however, was softened by his anticipation of the glory which would cover him when the war was over and done, and when the name of John Grigg, Jr., should stand high upon its list of heroes.

"Oh, John, don't go to the horrid war!" exclaimed Patty impulsively. "I'm just certain you'll get killed!"

"Pshaw, Patty!" said John as he put his arm around her, "don't be a little coward. I'll come home a great man, and then you'll be glad I went."

The same day Patty and her mother accepted an invitation extended by the girl's aunt, who lived in the village of Bridgetown, to make their home with her until the return of Reuben. So, leaving the farm affairs in charge of an old man, who was too far advanced in years to be of service in battle, Mrs. Most and Patty went to live with Mrs. Milford in the village until the happy day when the war should end.

Mrs. Milford's house stood on Main street, not far above Garden lane, upon the corner of which two streets stood the even then old Friends' meeting house, where the mistress, who was a member of the society, was wont to worship on First days.

About four weeks subsequent to the two Johns and Reuben's departure a company of British troops en route from the Atlantic seacoast to Boston invaded Bridgetown for some unknown reason and proceeded to quarter themselves upon the startled residents.

Those of the troops who violated the privacy of Mis. Milford's household were three young officers. That dame did well for her involuntary guests, setting before them the best to eat and drink that her house afforded.

Major Derrond chose as the drill ground the main street of the village, that being greater in width than any other. Upon this street stood Mrs. Milford's house, directly in front of which the British company would be forced to pass. This Patty noted with secret satisfaction.

Out marched the British column, passing and repassing with absolutely correct unanimity of motion. Twice, thrice, it passed the Milford mansion, and now it was about to do so for the fourth time. A minute more and the center of the long line was exactly opposite the house.

Suddenly the shutters of a second story window flew open, and from out the window was thrust an American flag. A bonny head appeared just behind it, and the accents of a shrill, girlish voice rang "Hurrah for the Americans!" The company stopped like a flash.

"Arrest that woman!" thundered the bility had flashed across the girl's mind. She unfolded it rapidly to John, and that youth, timorous and faint hearted though he was, succeeded in mustering a small degree of enthusiasm concerning it. He low. finally agreed to do his part, and was let out of the house, as he had come, by

As the tall clock in the hall struck 1 Patty crept back in bed again and lay shivering nervously, with sleep far from her eyelids. Her thoughts were with John as he trod the drenched road upon the mission on which she had sent him.

Would he prove equal it, or would he be found wanting as before? She heard the clock strike 2, then 3.

She waited a long time, listening for it to strike 4, when again a shower of gravel rattled against the window panes. Her heart beat wildly as she hurried to the window.

The same figure, looking more drenched if possible, she saw dimly below.

other minute was talking eagerly with John in the kitchen. He was quite a different youth from the one she had admitted but a few hours before, and who had confessed to such pitiable cowardice.

All trace of the despondent cringe with which he had stood, so full of shame, before Patty had disappeared, and he seemed now like a man who could be trusted in any crisis.

"Everything is all right," he said. And then he secured from her the names of the villagers upon whom the Tory soldiers had quartered themselves. With the British company's protracted stay in the village, the girl knew almost to a man whose the different houses were which sheltered part of the king's After this information was secured

John again disappeared, and Patty, for the third cime that night, sought her couch, but not to sleep, however. Meanwhile the Continental company. which had been brought by John from their nearby camp, rapidly and noiselessly surrounded each dwelling where a prize was to be secured in the shape of a British soldier. When the work was complete, the trumpeter stood in the center of the village and blew a stentorian blast.

For a moment there was no sound in reply. Then windows were thrown open, and at every one appeared one or more heads, the owners thereof rubbing their eyes and sleepily trying to discover the cause of such unseemly disturbance of their peaceful slumbers.

The British soldiers, too, stumbled out of their comfortable beds, surprised and uncomprehending. When they looked into the street, however, and saw at every door the Continental blue and yellow, they rapidly arrived at a correct conclusion.

Ere long every red coated soldier in Bridgetown was in the custody of the Continentals, who promptly conveyed them as soon as possible to the New England headquarters, where honors were showered thickly upon the heads of the entire company.

John went with them and received his full share as the supposed author of the capture. What the commanding officers always supposed was merely a harebrained midnight visit to his sweetheart was pardoned in the light of its unexpected and happy result.

John served all through the long war after that with bravery and distinction, his part in the snaring of the British soldiers apparently having cured him of the slightest suspicion of cowardice. And Patty kept her husband's secret well. The little old Friends' meeting house, with its bullet scarred wooden pill stands as a mute monument to the Revolutionary maiden's bravery and to the authenticity of my story. Ask any member of the Quaker clan which of the many objects that the town holds is chief, and he will take you without a moment's hesitation to the old house of worship which sheltered the spot where the British bullet found a resting place over a century ago.—Philadelphia Press.

The Power of Little Things.

Daintiness in trifles is very attractive. A gift that is wrapped in good paper and tied with a pretty ribbon, for instance, looks twice as tempting as the same present carelessly given. Every one knows how a table may be made refined or otherwise by the mere setting of the china, glass and cutlery and how the touch of the mistress' hand will convert the clumsy disposition of an inexperienced servant into an arrangement of beauty and order. The same room with the same furniture may look as widely different as the desert of Sahara and the garden of Eden, according to the taste shown by its occupant.

This power of little things cannot be overestimated, and it is not only in things inanimate, but in words and deeds, that this most desirable quality of taste may be manifested. A kind action may be made graceful, a generous gift may be bestowed tactfully, by force of what might be deemed a trifle, but which sometimes is of the greatest importance. On the other hand, a careless, neglectful manner will almost rob a kindness of the pleasure it was intended to bestow and render it absolutely distasteful to the recipient.—New York Tribune.

Shattered Romance.

"Just one," said the lover as he stood apon the stoop with his girl, "just one." "Just 1," said the mother, putting her head out of the bedroom window above. "Well, I guess it ain't so late as that, but it's pretty near 12, and you'd better be going, or her father will be down.

And the lover took his leave with a sad pain at his heart.—Boston Courier.

The Difference.

"You are charged with being drunk and disorderly, but as this is your first offense I will only fine you $3 or send you to prison for one day."

"I'm obliged to you, your honor, but really I haven't got a cent of money.' "See, that comes from drinking Now, if you hadn't got drunk you could easily pay such a small fine as $3." A dozen soldiers ran to fulfill the order Fliegende Blatter.

The window was quickly thrown down, fastening the flagstaff down and holding it in position, where it continued to gently wave defiance to the Tory throng

Meanwhile Patty had heard the order for her arrest and ran like the wind down the rear steps, through the plat of ground at the rear of the house and out into Garden lane. Across the way the door of the old meeting house stood invitingly ajar, the aged sexton having forgotten to close it after the day's garnishing. Into it Patty ran, but not quickly enough to escape observation by the soldiers.

One of them caught a glimpse of her flying skirts as she entered the door and gave the alarm. In a moment the entire command, forgetful for the time of all discipline, rushed headlong after her.

Just as they had all reached the meeting house "slam!" sounded the solid door in their faces, and as they gath-'All right," she whispered, and in an- ered angrily around, baffled, they could hear the sound of the heavy iron bar as it dropped into place on the inside.

"Crash!" went the bullet through the pane, sent by some dastardly soldier's pistol.

"Stop that!" shouted one of the junior officers of the company. "The next man who shoots at that girl will be placed under arrest!"

On the inside Patty crouched in front of the center pillar of the building breathless and a good deal frightened. The bullet whirred over her head and buried itself in the wood about a foot above her.

In a moment one or two of the men outside, assisted by their comrades, had climbed to the window sill and had succeeded in raising the window about six inches. By degrees they widened the distance sufficiently to allow a soldier's body admission to the room. He clambered over the sill and dropped down on the inside.

"Ah, my pretty one," said the soldier to Patty, who was now thoroughly frightened, "so we've got you at last, have we?

Major Derrond looked grimly down from his high seat upon his horse as Patty was led, trembling and timorous, before him.

"Take this girl to my quarters and keep guard over her."

The colonel's quarters, which had been made in a stanch stone mansion in another part of the village, were reached soon, and Patty was forthwith taken to a room on the second floor and locked in, while a soldier stood guard without the door and another in the street just under the one window.

Two hours dragged their slow length away before Patty heard anything more from the soldiers. Then she saw them coming toward the house in groups of twos and threes.

Shortly, too, the major rode up, and throwing his horse's reins to a servant dismounted and entered the hall. Patty saw one of her three friends-the lieutenant-accompanying him.

After perhaps 15 more minutes had passed the same soldier who had locked the girl in came and unlocked the door, beckoning for Patty to come with him.

The soldier took her along the passageway and down to the lower floor before Major Derrond again. That officer seemed a trifle less stern, she thought, than when she was at first taken before him. "I have decided " said the major "to repeat the offense to his majesty that was the cause of your being here. Are the leading railways of the world. you willing to give that assurance?" Patty hesitated a moment, and finally deciding that by promising she need in nowise be untrue to her father's and lover's cause, gave the required promise. Upon a night soon after a heavy rain had begun to fall about dusk and had continued drearily the night long. Shortly after 9 o'clock the little village was locked in slumber, Patty had retired soon after 9 and had fallen immediately asleep. Nothing disturbed her dreams until just after midnight, when a shower of gravel rattled sharply against her chamber win-

The girl was awakened almost instantly, and jumped from her bed to investigate the cause of the strange proceeding. "It's me, Patty," came a low voice from below, which she immediately recognized as that of John, Jr., her lover, who was supposed to be far away to the

Hastily she threw on her clothes, and in a moment had unfastened the heavy kitchen door and had admitted the soldier youth, drenched and bedraggled, to the welcome warmth of the open fire, which, although the season was summer, gave out a generous heat to the chilled and dripping youth.

"Now," said Patty as John removed his coat and stood before the fire, "tell me how you came to come home?"

John made no answer for several minutes. Then he said:

"I suppose that I might as well tell you, Patty, that I've deserted." The girl failed to comprehend for a moment and sat with wide, wondering

"You don't mean, John," she finally said slowly, "that you've run away from the army, do you?"

"You said yourself that you wouldn't blame any man for being afraid," he said feebly.

"Yes," answered Patty, "but I've changed since then. I'm not a coward any longer. The tables seem to be turned now," she added significantly, and John flushed uneasily. And then the girl re-counted the story of her adventure with the British soldiers.

At this the weeping soldier lad dried his eyes and sat up a little straighter. "You must have walked a good way," Patty said after a time, a little more kindly. "Where did you leave the army?" "Not very far from here," answered John. "Our general heard the British were fixing up a headquarters down here somewhere and sent a company down to see. They're in camp now about seven miles to the north. None of the men saw me slip out," he added in a shamed way.

A moment later and a glorious possi-
