tered into rest on the 6th of last December, at the full age of fourscore years, belonged to that generation of men to which Michigan owes its greatness. He was one of that band of earnest, high-minded men who, coming to this Peninsula, when it was little more than a wilderness. set about to transform that wilderness into a land of homes. They came here to live. They were not adventurers; were not in quest of fortunes easily made. They were willing to labor, and content to thrive by patient industry. They brought their morals and their religion with them. They set higher store upon truth and honor than they did upon money. By purity in private life, by justice and honor Saunders, Henderson and Hall, are in business dealing, by hard work playing a week's engagement of and courage and perseverance, by opera repetoire at the Grand Opera intelligent and generous interest in pipe red hot. The foremost men of the world write the literature of contemporaneous activity for THE FORUM.

Every great subject is taken up by The Forum when it naturally comes into public attention and is treated by the best authorities, without regard to parties or creeds. It will keep any thoughtful reader informed on the tasks and problems of the time, as no other periodical does.

To many thoughtful people, the price of The Forum has hitherto been prohibitory; indeed all the great Reviews have been too high in price for the masses of intelligent readers. But now the number of readers of thoughtful literature men and women who wish really to know what is going on in the world outside the narrow limits of particular sects and parties—is great enough in the United States to warrant so revolutionary a reduction in price. The Forum discusses important subjects, but it is not dull. The literature of contemporaneous activity is, in fact, the most interesting of all literature. American citizenship implies that a man shall know the opinions of the foremost men and the latest great achievements in every direction of activity.

At no time in the past thirty years has there been such a depression in the wholesale trade as at present. Clothing, Hats and Furnishings, like stocks, have been a drug on the market. Manufacturers, like brokers, have run around like wild men trying to dispose of their goods; real value and actual cost of production cut no figure with them; the goods had to go! Our buyer is constantly on the lookout. Last week we bought out the stock of Butzell Bros. & Co. and O. P. Hazard. The goods have arrived and are now on sale. They were bought cheap and will be sold cheap. A certain building lot in this town has been the scene of more hard labor wasted than any other equal area of land in this county, we have no doubt. Five times has stone been brought to this most desirable lot, for it is certain that, then, with the next purchaser would come a team to remove the stone, and soon another load would come to take its place. And so the act has been repeated until no interest would be aroused now in that neighborhood should it be ascertained that a Vanderbilt had purchased the prop-erty to use for building purposes. The last purchaser did not go so far as to draw his stone, but the house promised for this winter is still a dream and a myth. No explanation offered thus far seems probable for this curious reticence on the part of purchasers to build unless the "ghosts" who attempted to frighten our good people last spring frequented this lot too much, a thing they certainly did somewhat. This goes far ahead of a haunted house, anyway.—Chelsea Standard.

Washtenaw Horticulturalists.

The Washtenaw Horticultural Society held its annual meeting last Saturday p. m., Dec. 2d, in its room in the court house. The officers made their annual reports, election of officers took place and the business of importance was transacted. President W. F. Bird recommended that hereafter the supervisor's room be used if practicable, in which to hold the meetings of the society. He also suggested that on suitable occasions meetings be held at the residences of various fruit growers in the county, believing that such meetings would possess social advantages and yield much practical information not obtained from meetings held in the city. The treasurer reported all bills paid and a small balance on hand. The secretary reviewed the meetings of the year, dwelling particularly upon the part taken by the society in securing an amendment to the yellows law and the revision of the fruit catalogue. The effort to secure a reduction in the rate of transportation on peaches in which the society was asked to assist, had proved un-

The corresponding secretary then presented the following outline of the work of the society, during the fifteen years of its existence:

From the first the society has taken an active interest in all that relates to the advancement of horticulture in this locality. Those who were instrumental in its organization were known to us not only as successful fruit growers themselves, but as public spirited citizens anxious to see others share a like prosperity. We cannot know how much the peach growers of this vicinity are indebted to Mr. Baldwin for his early experiments with this fruit and for his persistent efforts year after year to impress upon others his faith in the success of the peach upon the hills surrounding our city.

To Benjamin Day and his early success with the Cuthbert raspberry is undoubtedly due much of the prominence which the small fruit interests have since attained.

To J. Austin Scott, for many years the homored president of our society, is due in no small degree the interest which has kept Washtenaw county for so long a time in the front rank among the apple producing counties of the state.

The intelligence and zeal with which others of our society who are still among us, have cultivated certain other fruits and made known their merits, is familiar to us all.

Early in the history of the society, its members began to co-operate in various ways to their commercial advantage. One of its first acts was a combination for the purchase of peach baskets, by which a considerable saving was effected. The matter of transportation received early attention and has been the subject of long continued labor and discussion. At first all fruit had to be shipped by express, and the excessive charges, together with the careless manner in which the fruit was handled made it imperative that some reform in that direction be secured. It was not however, until special arrangements were made with the railroad company which secured quick transportation by freight that any adequate improvement was obtained in the express service in regard either to the rates or the care in handling.

In 1885 the society published a list of suggestions for the use of shippers and dealers in fruit, also a set of rules for the guidance of berry pickers. In 1887, through the eiforts of this society, a fruit preserving factory was established in Ann Arbor, which has been of considerable service in times of low prices. In order to secure the erection of this factory the society procured for the firm which maintains it, a bonus or subsidy of one thousand dollars.

At the meetings of the society, numerous new varieties have been exhibited from time to time and their character described in its published proceedings. New implements, fruit packages, etc., have also been brought before the public on these occasions.

The society has usually had charge of the horticultural exhibits at our county fair, and has frequently made collections of fruit for exhibition else-

On three occasions the society has entertained the annual meeting of the State Horticultural Society. It has memorialized the state legislature regarding the preservation of forests and on other public questions. The mayor of Ann Arbor first pointed out a defect in our state yellows law, and this society passed the first it. Hood's cures.

been accomplished. It was at the request of our society that the township officers of Ann Arbor proceeded to appoint the proper commissioners for the suppression of the yellows, when that disease was discovered in this locality.

ANN ARBUR ARGUS, DECEMBER 6, 1886.

The society has been fortunate in having assistance from professors in the state University who have served as consulting officers in their scienthic capacities and have presented papers from time to time before the society. The gentlemen to whom the society has been thus indebted, are Doctors Vaughan, Steere and Prescott, the late Dr. Winchell, and Proiessors Spaulding, Davis and Harring-

Meetings have occasionally been held on special topics of interest to others besides fruit growers. Among these none have been of greater value than the annual road meetings held in March in recent years.

The society has at all times endeavored to keep abreast of all modern improvements in horticulture. The spraying of fruits for the destruction of injurious insects was adopted as early as 1880 by W. W. Nichols, its first secretary, who has since been particularly successful in the use of Paris green and London purple against the codling moth in the apple. Among those who have employed the modern remedies for the black rot and other diseases of the grape, none have been more enterprising and successful than the one who is now our president, Mr. W. F.

Our estimate of the influence of the society would be far from complete without a reference to the publication of its proceedings, The meetings whether largely or poorly attended have always brought sub-facts facts of real value to its power. The presentations of new items of experience, such as notes on varieties and methods of culture has at all times been a leading feature of our meetings and these facts have been welcomed by other fruit growers wherever published. Ever since the organization of the society a record of its proceedings has had a place in the transactions of the State Horticultural Society, thanks to the faithful services of our recording secretary, Mr. Jacob Ganzhorn, who has occupied that office since the second year of its existence. To Mr. Emil Baur, for 13 years corresponding secretary, is due the popularity which our society has enjoyed with its peers of our city and the state. He not only succeeded in making its proceedings sought for by all the papers of Ann Arbor, but had the satisfaction of seeing them frequently copied into other Michigan papers, and sometimes into those beyond our state.

The delegates appointed on numer ous occasions from our society to attend meetings of similar societies elsewhere have done their share to di seminate in ormation on horticultural matters and have brought back valuable information in return. State Horticultural Society our society is enabled to furnish each of its members with a copy of the annual proceedings of that society, the most valuable horticultural publication in

It is evident that the society is doing an important part in the building up of the horticultural interests of this locality. More of our gardeners and fruit growers ought to be among its active members. Some are satisfied to read the proceedings as published in the local papers. This is a mistake. The secretary, it is true, endeavors to record what he considers of special value, but he can ulster. only publish what is presented; he cannot know the particular needs of each, which can only appear as questions are asked at the meetings. Let us therefore endeavor to fill up our meetings during the coming winter months and by so doing increase the influence and usefulness of our valued

The society then proceeded to the election of officers for the ensuing year with the following result

President, W. F. Bird; vice presidents, O. R. L. Crozier, Emil Baur, B. J. Conrad; recording secretary, Jacob Ganzhorn; corresponding secretary, A. A. Crozier; treasurer, J. H. Almand; executive committee, B. G. Buell, J. C. Shenck, E. H. Scott, C. J. Conrath. Scientilic officers: Botanist, Prof. V. M. Spaulding; Ornithologist, Dr. J. B. Steere; Entomologist, Prof. H. C. Markham; Hygienist, Dr. V. C. Vaughan; Cimatologist, Prof. J. Montgomery.

The announcement was made that the State Horitcultural Society would hold its annual meeting at Lawton, Van Buren county, during the last week in December. President Bird was appointed delegate from this society to attend that meeting. He will present a paper or "Grape Growing."

TERMS .- $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE CITY. Entered at the Post-Office, in Ann Arbor, Mich as second-class matter.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 8, 1893.

President Cleveland's message is a strong one and deals with a large variety of topics. His recommendations on the whole are sensible and business like. The country can congratulate itself upon possessing a sturdy, honest, common-sense chief magistrate with convictions that he is not agraid to express and to stand by. Mr. Cleveland's views always make good reading and he has given many expressive phrases to the country. Such phrases are not lacking in this message. We may expect to hear considerable about "sublimated theories" hereafter Certainly many sublimated theories are exploited in this city.

A general press dispatch from Philadelphia during the past week says: "There was a speculative tendency which was but a natural result of the publication of the proposed tariff law, and X wool sold for 21 @ 22 cents, the highest they have brought for months." This is exactly what the Argus has predicted for several years. If wool is put on the free list, it will be higher next year. Next week the Argus wil republish an article written just before the passage of the McKinley bill giving the effect of tariff or wool. Our predictions at that time were fully carried out, and the predictions that wool will be higher if put on the free list is one which is based not only on sound reasoning but also on experience. The Argus will refer to the arguments at length next week.

During the past year, the pension rolls of the country have been increased by 89,944 names, and yet we find some republicans howling that the democratic administration is an enemy of the old soldier's because 33,690 names were dropped from the rolls, while 123,634 were added. The president well says:

"I am unable to understand why frauds in the pension rolls should not be exposed and corrected with thoroughness and vigor. Every name fraudulently put upon these roll is a wicked imposition upon the kindly sentiment in which pensions have their origin; every fraudulent pensioner has become a bad citizen; every false oath in support of a pension has made perjury more common, and false and undeserving pensioners rob the people not only of their money, but of the patriotic sentiment which the survivors of war, fought for the preservation of the union, ought to inspire. Thousands of neighborhoods have their well known fraudulent pensioners and recent developments by the bureau establish appalling conspiracies to accomplish pension frauds. By no means the least wrong done is to brave and deserving pensioners, who certainly ought not to be condemned to such association."

THE Hon. Frank Hurd in making a political speech during the campaign of 1888, at Delaware, Ohio, prophesied as to what the people might expect if the protective policy of the republican party was adopted. These are the words used: "Standing before you today with honest conviction of the truth I am about to utter, I declare that the principles of protection as applied by the republican party to the economic policy of this country is the enemy of every man within the sound of my voice, and here I say to the great agricultural interests, in which a majority of you are engaged, that if the protective policy of the republican party is continued in force, within five years wheat will sell in the market of this city at fifty cents per bushel." Mr. Hurd was laughed at by everbody, but no one is laughing now.-Mt. Clemens

The Village North of the Opera House Saved With Difficulty-The Total Loss Will Be Near Eighteen Thousand Dollars-Milan Also Suffers a Fire Loss of Over Twenty Thousand.

USCODA, Dec. 6.—The worst fire in the history of Oscoda, except one or two mill and lumber fires, occurred Tuesday morning. At 4 o'clock King's Opera House building and the saloon building adjoining were discovered to be flames, and in less than half an hour the opera house was burned to the ground. The wind was blowing almost a gale. All of the village north of the opera house would have gone, had it uot been for the blinding snowstorm.

The flames leaped across Main street and caught in Alex Bonenfaut's large building, which was completely gutted. At one time the front of C. V. Hicks' building on the opposite corner was on fire, but several streams were turned on

The first floor of the opera house building was occupied by the Oscoda postoffice, H. C. King's drug store, A. V. Loomis' store and Rix Brothers' grocery store. Not a thing was saved in the entire block. The opera house building cost about $5,000, and was built 9 or 10 years ago. Rix Brothers built 9 or 10 years ago. Rix Brothers, had a stock of about $4,000, with $2,000 insurance; Loomis, $4,000 to $5,000 stock, with $2,700 insurance; King, $2,000, partly insured; postoffice fixtures, $300 or $400. The usually dry first day at Adrian. The usually dry first day session was enlivened by a paper read by Dr. J. H. Bishop Gillespie, chairman of the state board, took exceptions and moved that the recommendation be struck from files. struck from files.

After that debate the question went over until today. At the session in the evening Governor Rich spoke on the work of Michigan for criminal and unfortunate, saying that this state was of the first rank in all work, save for feeble minded, and that would soon be changed, a home having been ordered. Justice Grant of the supreme court attacked the method of sentencing criminals, advocating uniform sentences for the same grade of crime.

His Bail Increased. KALAMAZOO, Dec. 4.—Stonewall J. De France is still in jail, and will probably stay there until Dec. 11, the day set for his appearance in the circuit court, he having been held for trial. His bail was fixed at $15,000, and his attorneys claim it is excessive to such an extent as to be unconstitutional. The defense put no testimony in at the examination, although they objected to his being bound over without the testimony of the complaining witness, J. K. Wagner, whom the people would not put on the stand, claiming that his estimony would be simply cumulative.

Canning Factory at Ludington.

LUDINGTON, Dec. 5.—The Development company has for some days past been maturing a plan to start a can-ning factory on their lands within the city limits. A Mr. Sourwein of Balti-more has been here making prices and terms on different sized plants io the company, and the board of directers have become so far convinced of the value of such an enterprise that they have appointed Messers Dunham and Wratten, two of their members, a special committee to visit other canning institutions in this state and examine methods of carrying on the busiHighest of all in Leavening Power.-Latest U.S. Gov't Report.

ABSOLUTELY PURE

ness he proposed plan is for the bevelopment company to build the plant and operate it, buying fruits and vegetable to can from those who settle upon the company's lands, until all they have to sell has been used, and then to buy their further supplies from farmers who live within easy reach of the factory. The farmers, gardeners and fruit raisers in the county promise abundant aid to such an enterprise.

A FEMALE BURGLAR.

Gustie Krigan Commits a Clever Theft at

Port Huron. Port Huron, Dec. 7.—Gustie Krigan is but 15 years old and a burglar. She confesses a most bold and clever crime. Monday evening she walked four miles in the snow to the residence of George Beach, a milkman, by whom she was formerly employed. Although the family were in the house she entered through a window and hid in a closet till they had retired, when she ransacked every room, stealing three gold rings, three dresses and valuable jewelry. She put the spoils in a satchel and then walked calmly home.

Gustie took the goods to a friend's house in Fort Gratiot, where they were recovered. She was arrested and induced to make a clean breast of the whole affair.

Carno Was Slick.

GRAND RAPIDS, Dec. 5.-S. A. Carno of the firm of Carno & Morton.furriers, took $585 of the firm's money and went to New York a week ago to buy goods. He has written to his partner, Mrs. Morton, that he will not return. The money he took belonged to her, as he had no financial interest in the firm. Carno made love to his landlady, Mrs. Theresa Mendel, a pretty Jewess whose husband is dead, and succeeded in borrowing $364 from her, promising interest at the rate of $15 a month. Mrs. Mendel is sick from the shock, and swears she will kill him at sight. It is believed that Carno will not return to the city, and his present whereabouts are unknown. He was a man of exemplary habits and associated with the best German families in the city.

New Pardon Board Organized.

Lansing, Dec. 7.—The new pardon board, composed of H. D. Smith, Cassopolis; Nathan R. Gilbert, Bay City; Charles F. Beck, Detroit, and E. L. Reardon, Greenville, met at the governor's office Wednesday and organized for work by choosing H. D. Smith, president; Nathan R. Gilbert, vice pres-secretary. Regular meetings will be held on the third Wednesday of each month, and the next meeting will be at Ionia.

Road Measure Defeated.

OSCODA, Dec. 7.—The special election held in this county on the county road system resulted in an inglorious defeat for the measure. From returns received it appears that the farming districts united with the lower end of the county, including the villages of Tawas City and East Tawas, in voting against the measure. Au Sable and Oscoda carried it by a handsome majority. The measure is defeated by a majority of about 200.

After Dishonest Dealers.

Lansing, Dec. 6.—State Food Commissioner Storrs is after those dealers who persist in selling butterine for bntter and threatens to institute proceedings against some of them at once. He has submitted several articles of food to Professor Kedzie for examination, and from the impurities found it is believed that Michigan, on account of its in the second several articles. its insufficient laws, has been made dumping ground for impure goods.

Her advanced age makes recovery doubtful. She was able. however, to sit up and to execute her pension vouchers. It is said that there are only two widows of 1812 surviving in this city. viving in this city.

Two Mines Start Up.

ISHPEMING, Dec. 5.-Mines 6 and 7 of Lake Superior company resumed work with full force Monday morning Superintendent Charles H. Hall states that he anticipates employing a full force of 1,000 to 2,000 men by the first of the year. Some of the miners at Winthrop are still out and demand a guarantee of $1 after their return per diem on contract work.

Crushed to Death.

TRAVERSE CITY, Dec. 4.—While Charles Paddock was hauling a big load of logs down a steep hill just outside the city the horses started up, upsetting the load on him and causing his almost instant death. The logs had to be dragged off by the horses before the body could be extricated. Paddock leaves a widow and four children.

HE DID HIS BEST.

"Halloo, Charley, wake up! Don't lie there like a somnolent log!"

But Charley Evans only responded with succession of convulsive sneezes and "Cold in the head, eh? Never mind itap with you!"

"Up indeed, with knifelike pains shooting up and down every joint in a fellow's body, and his head feeling as if a hundredweight of lead were tied to every individual hair."

"Remember your engagements, Charley. Remember that the girls expect every young man to do his duty this splendid day."

Mr. Evans groaned.
"Ralph, your list of visits is comparatively small; you must go and make my apologies."

"Well, agreed. But first let me give you a cup of coffee."

"Never mind," groaned Charley. "What was I going to say? Oh, you must go and see Flora Howard for me. I told her last night that I should have something very particular to say to her today, and she'll think it a purposed affront if she hears nothing from me. "What shall I tell her-that you have a Reuben Gray. "It cannot stand."

woeful cold in the head?"

"Nonsense. Just explain matters to her and say that—that—in short, convey to her the idea that I love her and ask her if she will have me."

"Rather an awkward message for a third person to carry. Hadn't you better wait until you can plead your own cause in pro-pria persona?"

"No, no-it's a question that admits of no delay. There are a dozen beaux flirting round her the whole time, and it won't do to lose my prize for lack of decision. Just act as my proxy, Ralph. I know she will say yes."

"On my soul, Charley, I wish you wouldn't send me on this particular errand. Can't you find some other messenger?"

"Oh, I understand what you mean," said Evans, tossing restlessly on his pillow. "I know you were rather an admirer of Flora's at one time, but you must be aware that you never had any chance in that quarter. Don't be selfish—and, besides, I would rather send an honest, stupid sort of a fellow like you than any one else. No offense, Ralph, I hope?"

'Oh, no; of course not," said Ralph Brewster demurely, shrugging his shoulders. "Well, I'll do my best."

As Ralph Brewster walked rapidly along the ice glazed pavements he could not help mentally reverting to the gentleman he had left behind him.

"Pretty cool, I must say!" he remarked to himself. "I've seen a good many evi-dences of Charley Evans' selfishness, but this is the most convincing of all. Does he suppose I have no feelings? And then his calm way of taking it for granted that Flora Howard is dying for him. I'd rather undergo the rack than to do Charley's courting for him—but I mustn't indulge these lachrymose sensations." The slanting afternoon beams peeping into Charley Evans' invalid chamber played all sorts of merry pranks around his disheveled hair and restless head, and finally creeping up the wall vanished away into the purple mysteries of twilight-and Ralph Brewster did not appear to report progress. Charley grew impatient. It isn't particularly favorable to an angelic disposition to have a cold in your head, with aching bones and quivering nerves and a cranium throbbing as if somebody was trying to split it apart with a dull hatchet.

Nine, 10, 11 o'clock sounded on his strained ear, and still Ralph's familiar footstep had not fallen on the stair. What could have delayed him? And while he was revolving probabilities and possibilities in his weary brain Morpheus considerately came to the rescue, and he fell asleep to dream of standing before the altar with Flora Howard.

It was on the evening of the third day from this eventful first that Charles Evans sat before his fire, very cross because the doctor had prohibited his going out for a Suddenly the door was flung open, and Ralph Brewster burst in.

"Halloo, old fellow. How prised at my nonappearance, eh? Well. here I am to make all the necessary apolo gies and explanations. Charley held out his hand with a lazy acquiescence in whatever might befall that was worthy of a nobler cause.

"Well, Charley, I went to see Flora, as you wished me to.'

"Did you?" said Charley, rather bright-ening up. "What did she say?" "Why, I commenced by making all apologies for your absence-which, by the way, didn't seem to affect her very powerfullyand then I played offhand into the love 'Well?" demanded Charley eagerly. "The strangest part of the matter was that she didn't understand me, but seemed to imagine that I was making love for my-self—and before I could explain she had hidden her pretty face on my shoulder and confessed in the sweetest words woman ever faltered forth that my sentiment was not altogether unreturned!'

Charles Evans turned very red, sprang up, and then changed his mind and sat down again. "Well-what next?"

"Why, you can imagine the delighted perplexity of my position. Of course, I couldn't bawl out, 'You're mistaken in the individual, Miss Flora—I am only courting in behalf of Charley Evans; now, could I?" Charley Evans stared fixedly at his friend, but made no answer. Ralph went

"So, when I discovered that the brightest dream of my life—hitherto deemed as visionary and unapproachable as the very stars of heaven-was a blessed reality, I accepted the priceless treasure with the resolution to deserve it if possible. And as she was annoyed by the importunities of one or two wealthy suitors, who were favored by her parents, I concluded that the sooner matters were brought to a crisis the better. So we quietly slipped away and got married the selfsame evening! And now I claim your congratulations!' Charley elaborately pulled out his pocket handkerchief, but not as his alarmed friend imagined to give way to a burst of vain merely to sneeze!

Well, Ralph," said he composedly, when that operation was safely over, "you're a lucky fellow, and I'm not sure, after all, but that you deserve it."
"And you will come to visit Flora and myself in a friendly way?"

"As soon as I'm able to go out. Please to hand me that bowl of tea."—Boston

THOSE RUBIES.

Yes, she was dead at last-Margaret Demorest of Stony Lodge—and the shock of her demise had shaken Bellevue from center to circumference. Heart disease, the doctors said, when she was found one morning with a smile of peace frozen on her stern and withered features. The relatives accepted the verdict with due resignation, following the remains of the "dear departed" to their final resting place amid an ostentatious display of crape and black bordered handkerchiefs.

But when the will was read the excitement of the heirs-at-law rapidly ascended to fever heat. Miss Demorest had retained her eccentricity to the end and woven it into her last will and testament.

With the exception of a few bequests to her servants, the whole of her property, landed and personal, to the amount of $500, 000, was to pass into the possession of that one among her kinsfolk who should discover the hiding place of the 12 Demorest

Mrs. Meredith was Miss Demorest's niece, and Reuben Gray her nephew. The two were brother and sister, and the nearest akin to the dead woman.

Next came Margie Vane, child of the favorite nephew, who was to have been the heir had he not displeased his aunt by marrying, against her will, a girl of obscure parentage—"a pauper," Miss Demor-Harold Vane had died, closely followed by his wife, and the one daughter, Margaret, was left alone in the world and utterly penniless.

Mrs. Meredith had taken her—for the old aunt remained obdurate—and she was now serving in the capacity of maid to her beau-tiful cousin Maude. Margie Vane was not present at the read-the faintest hope of being remembered kindly by her father's stern old relative. When, therefore, they returned in anger and disappointment and gave an account of the wording of the will, Margie's hazel eyes opened wide in wonder. That afternoon and many ensuing afternoons Mrs. Meredith, Maude and Margie walked over to Stony Lodge and wandered fruitlessly about amid the treasures of brica-brac, statuary, books and rare old china. On one of these occasions Margie met Will Demorest, a cousin several times removed of her father's. He was a frank and handsome young fellow, with dark blue eyes and close curling fair hair. His was the genuine Demorest face, the index of a strong, noble character.

By occupation he was an artist in glass blowing, having learned the art in Venice. He had done considerable work for Miss Demorest, with whom he was a prime fa-the scathing rejoinder. "For neither, I assure you," said Will, with a bow. "Only at present I am more interested in pearls than rubies. Cousin Margie, may I show you the house? I believe I know it more thoroughly than most Margie shyly acquiesced, and the two went off together, leaving Mrs. Meredith and Maude to continue their search. "Are you anxious to find the rubies also?"

"They are magnificent gems," said Will, 'and were never set. I saw them just once, and they nearly took my breath away."
"I should like to see them," Margie said musingly, "but, oh, Will, were they any more beautiful than these exquisite cups? Surely that is impossible."

The cups in question were indeed exquisite. Blown of the costliest venetian glass, lily shaped, with curled leaves for saucers and glowing with rainbow tints, they resembled nothing so much as a bed of gorgeous tropical flowers.

"How lovely! How dainty! How fairy-like!" she exclaimed breathlessly. "See, Will, this one is exactly like an opal with a touch of fire, and here is an amethyst, and here is a glowing emerald."

As she spoke she took the ruby cup into her hand. Will half started forward as if to prevent her, but drew back again with a pale, startled face. Mrs. Meredith and Maude appeared upon

Girls In Business.

Very much has been said on the subject of girls with independent incomes or well to do parents going into business or taking up any means of livelihood, and severe and it would seem very unjust criticisms have been indulged in.

It is claimed by working women and their champions that for a girl with a good home or an income to go into business or take remunerative work to do is unjust to those who are dependent on their own exertions for a living. Just where the justice of such criticism comes in it would be difficult for any philosopher to decide. No one thinks it strange. Indeed it is quite the proper thing, when a boy on or before arriving at maturity, goes out into the world to earn his living. However wealthy his father may be seems to make no difference. Indeed under such circumstances industry and application to business are looked upon as all the more praiseworthy, but for some mysterious reason the girl is not allowed this privilege.

This appears to be but another of the relics of barbarism which unfortunately cling like barnacles to the ship of prog-

Everybody has a right to earn a living or any portion of it by whatever honorable occupation he may see fit to take up. Whether it be a man or a woman matters not.

There is plenty of work in the world for both the boys and the girls.-New dding Wreaths of the World. The wreath which graces the head of a bride on her wedding day has been sung by more poets, even the great ones like Schiller, than any other chaplet of fame or honor. In the early days the Jews saw in the wreath a sign of what for them was the most beautiful and precious-the promised land-and of the myrtle the bridal crown was woven. Later this myrtle wreath became the symbol of womanly purity and as such is worn by every girl bride in Germany In many parts of Germany the sprigs from which the wreath shall be twined must be taken at a fixed hour of the night between certain holy days. And in both Denmark and Germany families possess myrtle trees which have for quite a generation or more furnished the bridal wreaths at family weddings. In Greece the myrtle and the rose were considered the favorite flowers of Venus, the twining of the two together signifying the union of love and virtue. In England, in France and in Poland, as in America, the orange blossom reigns supreme in wedding chaplets. In Italy the white rose has taken the place of the evergreen and fragrant myrtle wreath. In Spain it is the red, red rose that adorns a bride, and Portugal's wedding flower is the carnation.-New York Sun.

Savage Indifference to Pain. Generally speaking, the more civilized and refined races are more sensitive to pain than barbarous and uncivilized races. This was proved by Dr. Felkin in a series of carefully planned experiments which he made upon Arabs, negroes and Europeans. The stoical fortitude of the Arabs he considered due to peculiar mental characteristics, of which mental repression, self control and dogged endurance were the leading features. The indifference to pain in negroes he thought was due to diminished general sensibility, and he was led to believe that the relative sensibility of Europeans, Arabs and negroes was in the proportion of one, two and three. A New Zealander has been known to chop off his great toes so that he might get on a pair of boots which had been given to "You may try it," was all Lawyer Fay said to the threat.

Will came slowly forward and congrat- lian came to a settlement to get a wooden leg, his own leg being burned away at the knee. It had been wounded so se verely that amputation was necessary, and as his tribe had no appliances to stop the flow of blood his leg had been simply burned off.—Elmira Telegram.

Ripans Tabules: a standard remedy

The taupau of a neighboring village, specially enlisted as a first rate dancer, with four girl companions, formed the ballet. The taupau wore a marvelous headdress, resembling that of the youth who mixed the kava at Malie. Round her forehead was a band of small pieces of nautilus shell, above towered an erect wig of human hair which had been bleached for months in a marsh, little looking glasses were placed in front, and

The effect was something between that of a miter and of a Persian king's crown, but part of the structure fell off during the exertions which ensued. Behind the girls sat three or four men, one of whom contributed the musical accompaniment by beating on bottles wrapped up in cloth. The others assisted in the chorus singing, but their part

The performance of the five girls in front, who were at first seated on the ground, was exceedingly amusing. It consisted of a series of songs, mostly "topical," with a great deal of action. The taupau generally started with a solo, and the others presently joined in, swaying their arms and bodies backward and forward, touching each other's shoulders and moving their hands and fingers with peculiar grace.—Nineteenth Cen-

Water is then turned on and kept running until the cellar is flooded. A burglar would have to work in a diving suit and break down a cement wall before he could even start to loot the vaults. When the officers arrive the next morning, the water is drawn off, the masonry torn down and the vaults opened.—Philadelphia Press.

A short time ago Mr. Louis Bouton brought himself to the knowledge of scientific naturalists by undertaking an exploring tour of the Red sea, from which he brought back a strange and curious collection of fish and shells, embracing several specimens entirely unknown. serve at the bottom of the sea the metamorphoses of certain mollusks impossible to cultivate in aquaria. He was struck with the wonderful beauty of submarine landscapes and resolved to photograph what he could, since a simple description would savor too much of an overvivid imagination.

At first he worked in shallow water with a watertight apparatus, and the clearness of the water allowed him sufficient light to sensitize the plates. But proportionally as the water deepened clearness diminished, and the motion of the waves clouded his proofs. Then the young scientist conceived the idea of utilizing magnesium in an apparatus of his own invention. This apparatus consists essentially in a barrel filled with oxygen and surmounted by a glass bell containing an alcohol lamp.

On the flame of the lamp, by means of a mechanical contrivance, powdered magnesium is thrown, flaring as often as a view is taken. The barrel is pierced with holes on the lower side in such a manner that as the oxygen diminishes the sea water enters, so preserving the equilibrium between external and internal pressure. By the aid of this machine he has already made great progress in a direction new to naturalists and one likely to confer permanent benefits in the results obtained by their science. -Exchange.

"I had been troubled with heart disease 25 years, much of that time very seriously. For five years I was treated by one physician continuously. I was in business, but obliged to retire on account of my health. A physician told my friends that I could not live a month. My feet and Ilmbs were badly swollen, and I was indeed in a serious condition when a gentleman directed my attention to Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, and said that his sister, who had been afflicted with heart disease, had been cured by the remedy, and was again a strong, healthy woman. I purchased a bottle of the Heart Cure, and in less than an hour after taking the first dose I could feel a decided improvement in the circulation of my blood. When I had taken three doses I could move my ankles, something I had not done for months, and my limbs had been swollen so long that they seemed almost putrified. Before I had taken one bottle of the New Heart Cure the swelling had all gone down, and I was so much better that I did my own work. On my recommendation ist others are taking this valuable remedy."—Mrs. Morgan, 569 W. Harrison St., Chicago, III.

Rich, I attended a meeting of citizens held in the city of Detroit, called together for the purpose of devising means to relieve those who are suffering in the upper penin-You have been informed through the public press of the action of that meeting. The committee which was apointed to visit the upper peninsula are now there investigating the situation. It appears from the partial reports that this committee has already made that several thousand people must be supplied with food and clothing dur-ing the entire winter. Unquestionably the people of this city and of Washtenaw county stand ready to do their full share of this charitable work. It is necessary, however, to devise some plan of operation which will give every one who desires an opportunity to contribute to this object. The plan ought there-fore, in my judgment, to include the en-

It often happens that there are needy persons who are too sensitive to make their wants known, or are too independent to beg. I have no personal knowledge or any reliable information, that there is a single family in our city in want, but it is a fact that a large number of our people depend upon their daily earnings for their daily bread, and that to-day they are out of work and they may be out of bread also. The situation demands of us knowledge of the facts and that we do not suffer anyone to want through our carelessness or negligence.

No one can afford to miss this great concert.

of the American people to the wisdom of the municipal ownership of all such local monopolies as water, gas, and the like.

One of the great improvements of the fifteen years is our excellent fire department. I recollect that one of the curiosities that first attracted my attention on my arrival here was the old fire engine, trundled about the streets by hand, by volunteer line with the president's well known firemen, and operated by hand, and views. about as effective in putting out a fire as an old woman with a tea-

Ever since we have had a public water supply there has been a constant agitation of the very important subject of sewers, and it is gratifying that at last it has been settled that we are to have them. many efforts to secure it. I have spoken of the growth of the town in population, and the steady improvement that has been made in our buildings. Accompanying these there has naturally been a considerable extension of area, in various directions, so that the city extends now over probably twice as much ground as it did fifteen years ago.

At that time our beautiful Forest Hill Cemetery was spoken of as new, and was quite out of town. But now the town has crept up close to it, and is even spreading beyond it. And alas! how fast, too, has increased the population of that quiet city of the dead!

Since the old cemetery, between Huron and Washington streets, required to be removed, it was fitting that its ground should be made a public park. It is so central and accessible that it will always be an ornament and a benefit to the city. I cannot help regretting, however, that it could not have been extended so as to take in the small and steep, but picturesque, hills and valleys to the east, north and south, including that unsightly pool of stagnant water, known as the "cat-hole," now a public nuisance and a hindrance to the growth of that part of the city, but so easily capable of being transformed into a pretty pond, one of the most attractive features of the public park, that ought to surround it. There is no greater wisdom in the management of a city than that which looks out in time for the addition of parks and open squares and features of permanent public attractiveness. Sometime it will be seen, even more clearly than that charming walk and drive christened as the Boulevard. But it should not stop where it does. he has been received with the great- it should not stop where it does. That alone is a mere fragment. THE MESSAGE. President Cleveland Sent It to Congress

Monday. WASHINGTON, Dec. 5.—President Cleveland's message was given to congress Monday. In its full text it is very long, but the greater part is devoted to a review of the reports of the various departments. There is nothing radical or sensational in the message, the Hawaiian matter being but briefly touched upon, and the recom-mendations on the tariff question being in

After showing that we are at peace with foreign powers, and disposing briefly of such diplomatic negotiations as have been consummated or under way, he refers to the steps taken in regard to the Geary law, the arbitration over the Bering sea seizures, the discrimination in canal tolls, troubles in the South American republics, urges that the Nicaragua canal be completed under American auspices, the latest Samoan difficulty, the trouble with Spain over the outrages on our missionaries in the Caroline islands, and with Turkey, etc. He then takes up the Hawaiian matter and, after recounting the facts already known, and the action of the administration thus far, he says:

Upon the facts developed it seemed to me the only honorable course for our government to pursue was to undo the wrong that had been done by those representin us and to restore as far as practicable the status existing a the time of our forcible intervention. It a view of accomplishing this result within the eonstitutional limits of executive power and recognizing all our obligations and responsibilities growing out of any changed conditions brought about by our unjustifiable interference our present minister at Honolulu has received appropriate instructions to that end. Thus far no information of the the accomplishment of any definite results has been received from him. Additional After showing that we are at peace with that end. Thus far no information of the the accomplishment of any definite results has been received from him. Additional advices are soon expected. When received they will be promptly sent to the congress together with all other information at hand, accompanied by a special executive message fully detailing all the facts necessary to a complete understanding of the case and presenting a history of all the material events leading up the present situation.

After briefly giving a condensation of the report of the secretary of the treasury,

The recent repeal of the provision of law requiring the purchase of silver bullion by the government as a feature of our mone-tary scheme, has made an entire change in the complexion of our currency affairs. I do not doubt that the ultimate result of this action will be most salutary and far reaching do not doubt that the ultimate result of this action will be most salutary and far reaching.

The reports of the secretaries of navy, war and interior, the attorney general and the postmaster general, already made public, are given in condensed form. Of the postmaster general's report, he says:

He concurs with the recommendations of the secretary of the interior in regard to the treatment of the Indians, the disposal of public lands and upon forestry.

After devoting considerable space to the report of the secretary of agriculture, and the subject of pensions, he then took up civil service reform:

I am, if possible, more than ever convinced of the incalculable benefits conferred by the civil service law, not only in its effect upon the public service, but also, what is even more important, in its effect in elevating the tone of political life generally. The course of civil service in this country, instructively and interestingly, illustrates how strong a hold a movement gains upon every people which has underlying it a sentiment of justice and right, and which at the same time promises better alministration of their government.

The law embodying the reform found its way to our statute by a more from fear of the popular sentiment existing in its favor than from any love for the reform itself on the part of the legislators; and it has lived and grown and flourished in spite of the covert as well as open hostility of spoilsmen, and notwithstanding the querulous impracticability of many self-constituted guardians.

The president then discusses the tariff question in all its phases, and in conclusion says:

My intense feeling of responsibility impole me to invoke for the responsibility impole me to invoke for the remaining the many self-constituted guardians.

NEVER A FAILURE.

The Red River Valley of Minnesota and North Dakota has never had a failure of crops.
It produced 30,000,000 bushels of wheat besides other cereals in 1890. Farms can be had on the crop plan, or long time cash payments. It is not an uncommon thing to pay for a farm from the proceeds of one crop.

It has all of the advantages of an old country in the shape of school, church, market, postal & railway facilities and all the chances of a new country in the way of cheap lands, rich soil, and increase in values. It is one of the most fertile and promising regions in America not yet fully occupied. In the rush to the far west, however, this rich valley has been over-looked. It has room for a million more people.

WOMAN'S WORLD.

THE FACTS REGARDING THE INFLU-ENCE OF WOMAN'S WORK.

Miss Stevenson at Wellesley-American Girls Abroad-A Baby Suffragist-Novelties In Bonnet Pins-Connecticut Women Voters. A paper read lately by Miss Ada Heather-Bigg before the British association presented some new considerations of the much debated topic of woman's work at home.

To woman's home work, says Miss Heather-Bigg, were attributed by some persons, and especially by workingmen, such evils as excessive toil, starvation wages and unsanitary surroundings. This assumption was based upon a fundamental misconception. The popular impression seemed to be that women were taking a larger share of the world's work than heretofore. But woman's work has not changed in quantity—only in character-and not even so much in character as supposed.

As a matter of fact, women of the working classes had always been joint breadwinners with their husbands. At no time in the world's history had the man's labor alone sufficed for the maintenance of his wife and children, and as an eminent French economist has said, 'The ideal society in which the man supplies all the wants of his family has never existed yet." Moreover, from the beginning of the middle ages women had worked at other industries than those that were domestic, sometimes pursuing such industries in their homes, sometimes outside of them. This truth had long been admitted and acted upon in France. It was affirmed in England before the industrial remuneration conference. "Not more than half the whole number of working class families." said Miss Simcox, "are maintained by the labor of the father, assisted only by the elder children."

It had been shown to apply even to the United States, where, though the total family income was higher than in Europe, and the husband's contribution to it larger, there were only a few industries in which, unaided, he could support his family. Even in the bar iron industry one-tenth had to be made up. In Belgium it was calculated that the husband earned three-fifths and the wife two-fifths. Talk about the gradual substitution of the woman for the man as bread earner was absurd. The woman's share in household maintenance was no more than it ever was. The facts had not altered, but the conditions of modern industry enabled us to see what the facts were. In short, a revolution was going on, not a substitution.

Formerly a woman working for her family in her home had to pick up fagots, fetch water, bake bread, spin flax and wool, cure, pickle, preserve, churn, wash, knit, etc. Today, at any rate in large cities, the wife's household work meant only mending, washing, cleaning, cooking-care of children being the same in both cases. Even among workingmen there were some enlightened enough to see that the ideal to be aimed at was not that the man should be the sole breadwinner, but that breadwinning should go on under circumstances which should secure the most comfortable life for the men, women and children of the family; which should permit the fullest development of all powers, and openly substitute economic co-operation on the part of the wife for economic dependence.-London Queen.

Miss Stevenson at Wellesley.

Miss Julia Stevenson, the second daughter of Vice President Stevenson, finds Wellesley life very fascinating and quite a change from the home life to which she has been accustomed.

She likes the cosmopolitan atmosphere for which Wellesley is celebrated, and she likes the generous spirit shown by the students, who esteem each girl for her own true worth regardless of wealth or social position.

"It seemed very queer at first that we were all obliged to have our daily housework duties," said Miss Stevenson, "but mine is not very heavy work, and I do not object to it at all. My task is to clear off the lunch tables at noon. It comes at a time of day, too, when I am very glad to get the cobwebs out of my brain," she added, with a jolly little laugh.

Miss Stevenson is very glad that Wellesley is a "girl's college." "You do not approve of coeducation,

"Well, I do for men," said Miss Stevenson. "I think for men it is an excellent thing. I have known two or three very awkward and clumsy young men to return from a coeducational college quite transformed into polished young gentlemen." Miss Stevenson laughingly admitted, however, that if all young ladies were to denounce coeducation it could hardly be expected to prosper.-New York Advertiser.

American Girls Abroad.

By the latest foreign advices American girls are warned that they have nothing further to hope for in England. They are, however, not left without hope. They are thoughtfully reminded that there are fine fields for enterprise in Malta and Italy. Malta is a small place, not very dressy. The best sort of army and navy company is to be met out there. and a few good letters of introduction and a little money will go a great way.

It seems that some American girls have found this out for themselves, and already there is a rustling in the British dovecots there. In Italy the Americans have it all their own way. The Polish families allude to the Quirinal as the Americans' court. The best places are filled by Americans. Queen Marguerite in speaking English chooses American expressions. It is said that a son of the Duke of Aosta has fallen in love with an American convent bred girl and wants to marry her. Altogether it seems that,

"And what is to vote?" she asked. She was told the vote was a little slip of paper with a name on it, and that every man could put such a slip in a box, telling whom they wanted, Harrison or Cleveland, and the one who got the most votes would be president.

"And will my papa vote?" "Oh, yes," was the reply.

"And won't you vote too?" she asked. "Indeed I would if they would let me, but they won't let me vote at all."

of many a pretty little bonnet was marred by the reckless use of these unsightly articles. But we have changed all that, and nowadays bonnet pins are made a special study with the most shapes, sizes and colors. Some of the flowers have a tiny crystal glistening in the center of the stamens, and brilliancy is added to counterfeit Neapolitan and wood violets by the same means. Pink tipped daisies make bewitching pins, as do sweet pea blossoms in natural tints. Pinheads set with crystals are always effective. Of more costly and elaborate designs there is an immense variety. Moonstones are much used in conjunction with diamonds, and many fanciful ideas are carried out in the multicolored stones which have been so fashionable of late.—Jewelers' Review.

Connecticut Women Voters.

Considering that school suffrage was granted to women in Connecticut but a few months ago, and that the elections last month afforded them the first opportunity to vote, they have shown much interest. They voted in over one-half of the towns. In Meriden they nominated Mrs. Kate Bohme for school visitor and for membership on the high school committee. They attended the party caucuses and secured her indorsement by the Republicans, Populists and Prohibitionists. Mrs. Bohme was elected on the high school committee and only failed by a few votes of election as school visitor.

The first woman to vote in Meriden was Mrs. Alice Ballou Twiss, wife of Bruce C. Twiss, a clerk in the postoffice and a graduate of the State Normal school. Glastonbury ladies, under the lead of Mrs. Hale, whose husband is a member of the Connecticut legislature, had a very enthusiastic meeting, and a large number voted. Mrs. Ada Crosby was elected school visitor. Miss Susan Cheney, in Manchester, and Mrs. Fannie A. Warner, in Rocky Hill, were elected school visitors. Nine hundred women voted in Hartford.—Meriden Letter.

Factory Women and Legislation.

Mrs. M. B. McEnery of this city, the first woman appointed a factory inspector, read a paper at Chicago, "Has Factory Legislation In Pennsylvania Been Beneficial to Factory Operatives?" Such laws, she said, are beneficial in proportion as they are wisely, energetically and equally enforced. She said of the Pennsylvania factory law: "Out of this law, and its enforcement by the devoted and courageous factory inspectors appointed under it, have grown in the past five years the practical enfranchisement of women and children employees. The puny children and haggard women who used to throng the streets morning and night are now the exceptions. They have been replaced by a cheerful army of women and children, well dressed and well fed, with vigor in their steps, hope in their eyes and health in every motion and act. Pennsylvania has practically abolished sweatshops."-Philadelphia Ledger.

Governor Flower's Wife.

Mrs. Roswell P. Flower's charities cost her an average of $250 a week. The Keep institute, corner of Third avenue and Twenty-third street; the Flower hospital, corner of Avenue A and Sixty-third street; the Boys' club in the St. Thomas Mission church, East Fifty-ninth street, and the Old People's home in Watertown, N. Y., are in constant receipt of her patronge and visits. Although her name appears on the list of patronesses for all sorts of objects, she never attends. Mrs. Flower is as shy as a schoolgirl. Her modesty has kept her from facing the camera. The only picture ever made of her was a crayon, which the governor insisted should be hung Mrs. Flower compromised by turning the face to the wall. A portrait is being painted of her now by an Albany artist.-New York World.

A Courageous Girl.

In an impromptu catch-as-catch-can wrestling bout, a New Jersey girl of 23 proved herself fully as good as a burly burglar who got into the house the other night. The episode shows that one thing we can do with some of our girls is to teach them not to be afraid. Not every one of them could be brought up to face an unlawful intruder as Lizzie Butts did in Belvidere. But burglars who depend "Who won't let you?" she exclaimed on the terrifying process in dwellings indignantly. "I think it's awful mean, where "the man of the house" happens to be a woman would become more cautious and less numerous if it began to be "Oh, no. A Woman Dramatic Agent.

The second woman in this country to run a dramatic agency is Mrs. Beaumont Packard, who journeyed from San Francisco and has just started in business in New York. Mrs. Packard says she has been an actress, a manager and pretty nearly everything, and she believes she can succeed in this line. She is a slight energetic woman, with light brown hair and gray eyes, and has the appearance of being a hustler.

A WIDOW'S DEVICE.

Miss Wellir lmina Perks and her father were staying in London. They had been in Paris for some time, too, partly because they were from Boston, but mainly because Wilhelmina had made there some special purchases for her new adventure.

She proposed to sail for Christiania from Hull in the middle of the month, and already the papers had interviewed her, and "Miss Wilhelmina Perks, the Female Franklin—By One Who Knows Her," ap peared in nearly every paper that you picked

They had all been to Lord's, and Dr. Fraser and his cousin, Mrs. Waldershare, had been brought back to dinner at the hotel.
"Well," said Miss Wilhelmina, "'taint no use talking, you know. My mind's set on this trip, and I'm going to do it."

"I know, my girl," said old Mr. Perks;
"I know. You wouldn't be a Perks if you was to give way now and go back on your reputation."
"And I'll just go and make a name for myself, and then I'll come right back, and"

—she glanced at Dr. Fraser—"and then we'll be happy."

Young Dr. Fraser pressed the young lady's foot affectionately beneath the table, and little Mrs. Waldershare smiled.

All the time young Dr. Fraser looked thoughtfully out of the window. "If you won't say another word about it," he remarked; "if you'll just let me say

"Go on, dear," said Miss Perks. She and Mrs. Waldershare rose as she spoke, and

"That I'd give everything, everything that I possess in the world," said Fraser, still looking hard out of the window, "if it would only induce you to give it up.'

She came to him.
"My dear boy," she said, "that can't be, but you're just the sweetest fellow to say so, and I shall think of you dreadfully.' Mrs. Waldershare had scribbled furtively a note on the menu, which she came back to show the young fellow. "Before I forget it, Frank," said the little woman, "is this the right way to spell com-

"Meet me in half an hour in the reading "Yes," said Dr. Fraser, "I think that's right."

The two men had their smoke and their coffee, and at the appointed time Fraser

Dr. Fraser hoarsely. "Promise that as soon as this American girl, with whom you think you are in "With whom I am in love."

Tell me what it is," said the voice of

"Very well, with whom you are in love, then. Promise me that as soon as she has gone on her preposterous expedition you will give me leave to speak again. I am no child in these matters, Frank."

"I can give you no promise of any kind,"

"I can quite understand your position," the little widow went on. "It's very hard on you. But when she comes back, if she ever does come back, after say three or four years, aged and altered by this ridiculous exploring business, she surely would not be surprised if she should find that you have forgotten her."

"I shall never, never forget her," declared "Attendez," said the little widow persistently. "I repeat that I know something of these matters. We'll let her go, let her get right away, and then we'll talk over this matter again. If I'm not mistaken, you'll be of a different opinion then."

"I beg you won't anticipate"-

"Oh, my dear sir," replied the little widow, with a catch in her voice, "think again. She does not love you really, or she would never leave you like this, risking her life and your affection."

"Don't speak to me, please," prayed Dr. Fraser; "don't speak to me. I am doing her a grievous wrong by listening to you."

There was a sob from the little widow,

THE OLD GARDEN.

No change, you say? Nothing of loss that tells? Trees, flowers, are they as lovely as of yore?

Does spring still deck with corals and green Our favorite sycamore?

The early lilacs, bloom they rank on rank, Purple and white as they have bloomed for vears? Old Crown Imperial on the mossy bank, Sheds he his hoarded tears?

The rose acacia, does it carpet now The pathway with its waxen blossoms red?
Drop the smooth berries from the laurel bough Into the violet bed?

Suffer the birds no loss, bereft so long Of us? Is not the blackbird mute for doubt? Is no part wanting to the thrush's song? No liquid note left out?

Does the moon show behind the hedgerow elms. Black bars against a spectral sea of light? Reigns our one star over the heavenly realms King on a clear, cold night?

They bloom, sing, shine, our absence hindering

They are but waiting till ourselves have ranged Enough, so we revisiting that spot

May find them all unchanged.

THE SECRET DRAWER

Having nothing more to do while waiting for the clock to strike 3, he arranged his papers, laid his pens away in the drawer, and after casting a glance at his clerks drowsing in the neighboring room closed his desk.

He felt so gay, so light hearted, that he could have slid down the baluster of the somber ministerial staircase, but he contained himself, and saluting the concierge, who was surprised to see him leave so early, entered the Rue Royale, now bathed in sunshine. Certainly it was unusual for such a model employee to be abroad so early. Well, what was the use of remaining two hours longer in the office when there was nothing left to do but snip papers, kill flies or try to write plays for the theater, occupations that were equally uninteresting and unprofitable?

He was not long in reaching his home, for since his marriage he had lived in the Rue Royale itself. How surprised and pleased his wife would be to see him home so early! He entered stealthily on the tips of his toes, crossed the antechamber and stood in the parlor.

It was empty!

No one in the dining room, no one in the bedchamber nor the boudoir. Evidently she was in the garden, hiding to surprise him, or possibly swinging in a hammock, enjoying the fragrant warmth of the beautiful day. He ran there quick as a thought. He did not find his wife. This was getting serious.

Why should she have gone out? He knew of nothing pressing that could have called her away! It was understood that she was always to wait for him; if the beauty of the day had tempted her, she should have stopped at the minister's and told him as usual.

In the room everything reminded him of her. A vague perfume-her perfumefloated over all. A handkerchief thrown down on the edge of the toilet table, a pair of gloves, too soiled perhaps for use. left on the bedroom mantel, showed that she had gone out in a hurry, because she was so orderly generally, and everything had its place. There was another reason for believing that something unusual had called her away, or why were these trifles tossed about so carelessly Tormented with doubt, his mind filled with vague suspicion, he sat down in the parlor and resigned himself to wait for her return.

But he could not remain quiet. After some moments he went toward the secretary and opened the bookcase above it. As the classics were in the back, he took out the volume in front, which he placed on a table at his side, and began reading a volume of Moliere.

The secretary was of ebony of the time of Louis XVI, ornamented with bronze open work. The desk leaf within was covered with stamped leather, and above it, hidden in the fretwork, was a false drawer. His wife was very fond of this piece of furniture, which he had given her one fete day about a month after their marriage. He had hunted a long time before he discovered it at an old antiquarian's, who assured him that it had remained in the possession of one family ever since it was made.

It was an elegant and graceful piece of furniture, and in spite of the high price Louis had not hesitated to buy it.

Then it was installed in the apartment during his wife's absence, and when she came in and saw it how she had flung her arms about her husband's neck and thanked him as only a true wife can!

It was indeed a little marvel. She had opened all the little drawers and poured into them the thousand and one little trifles that constitute a woman's treasure, and of which she is more proud than of her jewels, and she said, "This ignorance. How many husbands quite is my secretary," with all the jealous as unfortunate as himself in other ways pride of a proprietor.

Louis soon found the passage he was seeking in Moliere, and it had diverted his mind. He was less worried than before. As he was replacing the books, one slipped from his hand, and in attempting to catch it he struck the molding on the top of the secretary. There was the sound of a click, and the front of the false drawer swung out, displaying a hiding place whose existence he had never suspected. His wife had never spoken to him about this, nor had the merchant who sold it, or he would probably have made it an excuse for raising the price.

Suddenly he saw a package of letters in the depths of this tiny closet. Here was a romance! No doubt these papers were precious documents and had been placed there during the Revolution. He undid the package and then started back. Instead of antique manuscript the the paper was quite new and the handwriting perfectly modern, so modern that the ink was still black. He was tempted to throw this package, which without doubt had been placed there by his wife, who had said nothing to him about the secret drawer that he had discovered. What he believed to be the young woman would be apt to make after marriage, was in a man's hand. And what other man but himself had a right to address her as "My darling?"

other. There was little variation in the way they began—it was either "My adored one" or "My well beloved."

Well, he would get at the heart of the matter, so he began to read one of the letters, the one first under his hand. This is what it contained:

My DEAREST WELL BELOVED—When you informed me yesterday that they were forcing you to marry in order to forget me; that your parents obliged you to prefer my rival, I could not refrain from tears and reproaches. You know my love for you—that is my only excuse. Today I am coming to beg you to postpone this impossible union. Tell this man that you do not love him; that you can never love him. He will understand and retire. If he persists, then so much the worse for him! Fear nothing-I am not threatening you-today I am calm. My whole happiness is in your hands. I await your answer with impatience, but con-

He passed his hand tremblingly over his forehead, looked around him stupidly, asking himself if this was not some frightful dream.

No, he was at home in his own parlor near his wife's secretary, and in his hand was a letter—a love letter.

Then Fabienne-his Fabienne? No, no! It was impossible! He threw the letter from him angrily. Then curiosity again seized him, and he took up one of the other notes—a short one containing only a few lines:

MY ADORED-When you receive these lines, I shall have left France. I shall not come back until you recall me. I cannot be the accom-plice in a lie, or live near you and the husband they have forced upon you any longer. God grant that you may never have to repent. Farewell, farewell! A last kiss on the lips l

This was too much. He rose with a bound, scattering the letters on the floor, where they fluttered like a flock of frightened birds. He staggered to the window to cool his burning forehead. He stood there for a moment stupefied, his eyes on the clouds, then began to walk up and down the room with nervous strides, like a caged animal.

After a while he sat down and reflected. It was true-Fabienne, whom he loved so much and in whom he had so much confidence, was like all other women! She had lied to him from the first. She had lied to him since, every day. All those little caresses and evidences of affection had only served as a mask for the basest treachery.

He had been too happy. It could not

How could she have deceived him so? How could a woman with a character so sweet yet so decided, who spoke so frankly, whose look was so pure and loyalhow could she stoop to such duplicity? How had she begun to play such a part when nothing in her way of living, in her language, her manner, betrayed secret preoccupation? By what power of will had she been able to conceal a mystery so deep and penetrating? Well, it was all over-this fatal discovery was the supreme blow. His life was broken forever!

As he sat there the panorama of his life passed before him. The days of his childhood came back one by one. He saw himself again running like a colt through the woods of his country home, | you! startling his mother by the audacity of his exploits. Then one day his father's sudden death and the departure in tears. Years of battle followed. The little rooms in the Rue Truffant, with Lise. the old servant, who would not abandon them. Then college, with its long and tedious lessons, and finally the cowning step to success, his admission to the government office, where he made his way rapidly. He recalled his meeting with her. It was in the house of an old friend of the family at a soiree. He was standing awkwardly in a corner of the room rubbing his white-gloved hands nervously together when she came in followed by a murmur of admiration. She raised her eyes, they met his, and the romance of his life had begun. Delicious memories followed-he loved to linger over them now as over a beautiful dream that cannot, must not be forgotten.

Seated here in his own parlor that had been the scene of so much happiness, a terrible sadness oppressed him. The romance was over; the book must be closed. He felt that awful sensation of the irreparable, that impression of emptiness which seizes one after a great misfortune-one on which our entire life depends. His anger fell, and he regretted that he had found these letters. Better to have lived out his days in peace and were living in tranquillity, free from tom cash price. Address "W," care doubt. Cursed letters!

But what reason had he for thinking that they were written to her? They were not in envelopes. There was no address. Perhaps they belonged to a friend. It would be just like Fabienne to have taken charge of a secret correspondence to help one she cared for. But was he not a part of her? She need not have confided everything to him, but should know that the Pyramid Pile she might have spoken about it. Per- Cure will promptly and effectually haps she had forgotten to or feared to remove every trace of them. Any anger him. Some day, no doubt, she would tell him all. He was ready to seize at any idea to dispel his suspicions, and as he reflected he recovered in a measure his spirits. He made the resolution to return the letters to their hiding place, put everything in order and say nothing for the present about the matter. Then some day he would suddenly unmask his batteries, and his wife would be forced to avow her guilt or explain the mystery. He gathered up the letters carefully and placed them in the secret drawer, burned his hands, back in the drawer fearing every moment that his wife and put everything in order again, but might enter and surprise him. He looked curiosity was stronger than reason, and at the clock. It was only an hour since with a trembling hand he opened the he had come in, and yet it seemed as if he had lived years during that time. He

At the first word which he read a hastened to arrange everything and mist came before his eyes; he fell out- closed the secret drawer. At that mostretched on the sofa. These letters ment the doorbell rang. Just in time! It was probably his wife, who had forgotten her key. He felt a sharp twinge in his heart at the thought of meeting her face to face, but he hurried to let her correspondence of a friend, written in in. Instead of his wife, whom he exresponse to those confidences which a pected, a strange man confronted him, who addressed him by his own name.

"Sir," said the visitor, "I wish to speak to you particularly, and I shall be obliged if you will give me an interview He opened the letters one after an- of five minutes-if I do not disturb you.'

This speech puzzled Louis, but he made a motion for the stranger to enter. He closed the door, and they sat down in the parlor.

The visitor was tall and sturdily built. His face, sunburned and weather beaten, showed that he was accustomed to a life in the open air. A red ribbon in his button hole indicated that he was an officer in the navy.

He cast a sweeping look about the room, then his face lighted up, and he said:

'I hope you will excuse this intrusion, sir, but the matter was of so much importance to me that I sought out your address and hastened here. I will come straight to the point. I beg that you will sell me, at any price, your ebony secretary.'

Louis started in surprise and stammered out:

"Sir, what do you mean?"

"Oh, I know that my proposition is a strange one, but when you understand my motive you will pardon me. That piece of furniture which you bought from the dealer, who gave me your name, was sold at a time of need by a person"-Here the voice of the stranger trembled.

"By a person who through my fault was passing through a painful crisis. She had just lost her husband, who had squandered her fortune to the last penny, and she was forced to sell everything, even to the smallest trifle. This secretary, which has been in the family for a number of years, went with the rest. But she would only consent to part with it on condition that it could be bought back at the end of a year. As she did not appear at that time it was purchased by you. I was out of France at the period. Well, I came back and found my unhappy friend. Our first thought was to find the dealer and recover the secretary. I learned through him where it was, and here I am. I trust you will accede to my request, strange as it may ap-

"Sir," said Louis, "unfortunately that piece of furniture belongs to my wife, and she has filled it with her own things. I could not possibly disarrange it without consulting her."

The stranger grew pale. Then he said to Louis in a choking voice:

"Sir, do you know if your wife discovered a secret hiding place in the secretary?

"What hiding place are you talking about?" exclaimed Louis, with feigned astonishment.

The stranger sprang toward the secre tary and in a moment had opened the secret drawer, pointing at the same time to the package of letters. "You will understand by this why I cherish this piece of the furniture. Those letters were written by me to the woman who today became my wife." The words had hardly left his lips before Louis was feverishly tossing out pellmell the many trifles that filled the drawers and compartments.

"Take it," he cried. "Take it away. sir. I am only too happy to give it to

When his wife entered a few minutes afterward and saw the parlor in such disorder and her secretary gone, she uttered a cry of dismay.

"Console yourself, my darling," said Louis, drawing her close to his heart. "That piece of furniture revived unpleasant memories. I promise you anotheranother more beautiful."

And he smiled through his tears so tenderly that she grew calm, not understanding his grief, but feeling that what had been done must be, after all, for the best.-Adapted From the French For Short Stories.
