TUESDAY, JANUARY 12, 1894.

Judging from the grist of startling but groundless rumors sent out from day to day, the greater part of the Hawaiian trouble is located in Washington.

The income tax is said to be a popular measure in Congress and it will unquestionably be adopted by the House as a means for raising revenue.

The Senate committee on judiciary has reported adversely on the nomination of Mr. Hornblower for associate justice of the Supreme Court. This is a slap at the President by Senator Hill, et al.

There will probably be no extra session of the legislature this winter. Gov. Rich thinks there is little necessity for it as the communities in the upper peninsula, which were in the worst straits, are now pretty well provided for.

One of the greatest engineering achievements of the age, the Manchester ship canal, from Eastam to Manchester, England, was opened on the 1st inst. It is navigable for merchant steamers of the largest class and cost nearly £16,000.

The annual report of the chief of the bureau of statistics, Worthington C. Ford, for the year ended June 30, 1893, shows that during that time the value of the United States foreign trade, reached the highest mark in the commercial history of the country, and the export of gold reached a higher figure than ever before attained in a single year since the foundation of the government. His discussion of the causes of the outward flow of the yellow metal is exceedingly interesting, but space forbids comment here.

In 1892 the United States produced 58,000,000 ounces of silver having a coinage value of $74,989,900. During the same time the California tin mines yielded 160,000 lbs. The total value of the mineral products for the year was $684,778,768, which is $20,000,000 greater than the yield for any previous year.

The large democratic majority in the House of Representatives did not begin the tariff reform fight very auspiciously. Had a quorum of them been in their seats, where every one of them should have been, they might have prevented the disgrace of having tariff-reform held up by the tail for four days by the republican minority.

No action will probably be taken on what is known as the bond bill (a bill authorizing the secretary of the treasury to issue $200,000,000 of bonds) until after the tariff bill is out of the way. The question of issuing bonds for the purpose of keeping up the gold reserve has never been a popular one with the democratic majority.

The Detroit Tribune has raised the standard of revolt against the return of James McMillen to the United States Senate and has shied the castor of Gen. Russell A. Alger into the ring as a candidate for this exalted position. If this departure from party traditions and studied reflection upon the services of Senator McMillen is made with the knowledge and consent of Gen. Alger and he really desires to be senator, we shall probably witness a right merry old fight during the next legislative campaign. In a struggle of such financial giants, the good people of Michigan may expect to witness the placing of a large amount of high protective money where it will do the most good to the respective candidates.

The selection of Prof. J. M. B. Sill for the Korean Mission, although in the nature of a surprise to most people, is a most fitting appointment. Prof. Sill, through his long and prominent connection with the educational interests of Michigan, as teacher in the Normal School in his young manhood, superintendent of the Detroit city schools, principal of Detroit female seminary, regent of State University and principal of the State Normal School, is known of all Michigan people. Mr. Sill, in addition to his other qualifications will take with him an extended knowledge (he having been a special student of the Eastern Peoples) of the countries to which he is accredited as United States representative. The President could have selected no man with whose appointment a greater number of Michigan people would have been pleased.

For the first time since the civil war democracy is in control of all departments of the federal government, and new duties and responsibilities are thereby imposed which will test to the utmost the wisdom of the party and its right to continued leadership in the nation. There are questions of vital moment which must be met and the times demand immediate action. In carrying out the pledges for which the party was entrusted with power, it is essential that there be a sentiment of hearty unity. Final action, therefore, on all the great measures to be enacted, should find our representatives and senators, in their respective halls, standing together as one man. In a country of such vast proportions, there is bound to be diversity of interests leading to wide differences of opinion, but these differences should, so far as possible, be discussed and settled within the party ranks, and a solid front presented to the enemy.

An English trade review says that general gloom hangs over that country's industries and that there has been a shrinkage of every important class of imports and exports. During the past year, imports fell off $87,500,000 and exports, $32,500,000, while leading securities declined nearly half a billion dollars. It also asserts that the coal trade and the trade in textiles have declined enormously. The cotton trade is demoralized and exports show a serious decrease. Is all this the result of what protectionists are pleased to call the British policy of tariff reform in the United States, or is it the result of general as well as national causes affecting commerce throughout the world? Certain it is that England is not being benefited by the business depression in the United States, nor is the United States prospering on account of the hard times in England.

After the election last fall, when it became certain that the Democrats would control the entire government, the Republicans claimed to be pleased with the result, because it would make the Democrats responsible for the entire administration of affairs. Nevertheless they began at once to lay schemes to retain control of the Senate by hook or crook.

Now they assert that the Wilson bill means death to the Democratic party, and while they rub their hands in glee over its prospective demise, their representatives in Congress prepare to place every possible obstruction in the way of the bill becoming a law. Judging from their acts rather than their words, they are not so overly anxious for the death of the Democracy. They may as well take notice, however, that the Wilson bill will be law before the first of April and that it means Republican defeat in the Congressional elections next fall.

When wool goes up in price after the passage of the Wilson bill watch the republicans hunt their holes.

TARIFF BILL BEFORE THE HOUSE.

After four days on which roll calls and obstructive tactics were the order, a democratic quorum put in an appearance last Monday and the Wilson tariff bill was brought before the House. When the report, fixing the date for voting on the measure, had been adopted, the author of the bill, Chairman Wm. L. Wilson, of the ways and means committee, took the floor and began the delivering of a masterly speech in support of the measure. The effort was in every way worthy of the subject and the occasion, and it should be read by every American citizen. Mr. Wilson made no defense of the bill, believing it needed none, but he stated in a straightforward way the causes which led to its preparation and the reasons why it should become a law. He alluded to difficulties experienced in its preparation, and the compromises necessary in a measure covering so wide a field and touching such a diversity of conflicting interests.

While the bill was not all that tariff reformers desired, it was a considerable step in the right direction and all that could probably be secured. He then launched forth upon a scathing review of the policy which had led to the depletion of the treasury under the Harrison-Reid rule. It was that policy, he said which had caused the industrial depression which republicans charged to the fear of tariff revision, and on which they based most of their arguments against the bill before the House. He related the rapid decline of the treasury during the four years of republican administration as it passed from an overflowing condition to actual bankruptcy without lessening the burdens of taxation on the people, and described the schemes by which the surplus was dissipated. The surplus, he said, was dealt with after the traditional methods of protection, which was to abolish those taxes which pass undiminished from the pockets of the taxpayers to the public treasury, and to increase those which were interrupted in their passage from the pockets of the tax-payers to public treasury by the private toll gatherer. He denounced the McKinley bill which the people never asked for, and said he desired the fight to go on until the time shall come when no tax-payers will pay a single dollar that does not go straight and undiminished into the public treasury. His speech was in every way an able and brilliant presentation of the tariff reform side of the issue, and if in the speeches to follow, the democratic argument is kept up to the high key struck by Mr. Wilson, the subject will be invested with new interest.
