Needle Work Guild.

The meeting of the Needle Work Guild, held at the residence of the president, Mrs. W. S. Perry, on Monday afternoon, was of special interest, as Mrs. Mary Parke, president of the Detroit Guild, was present and explained the workings of the society. The Ann Arbor Guild is now fully organized and promises to be the largest society in the city for organized charity. Its object is to collect new garments for free distribution to the poor of the city. There are ten section presidents, besides the general president, and each president chooses three directors and a secretary. Each officer pledges herself to secure ten new members, who will give two new garments apiece, which constitute the membership dues. Every church society in the city will be represented in this society, and gentlemen and children may become members as well as ladies. The organization of the Needle Work Guild is rapidly spreading into every city and town and is the only society in the world that does not get up suppers and entertainments to secure funds for township and served as justice of trenches, the men furnishing their of religion or politics, are urged to the peace and for four years was own implements. This question is often heard and nearly as often unanswered.

It is not always remembered, as it should be, that the occasion of ill-temper and irritability is often to be found in the physical condition of the persons affected. What is the use of trying to "harmonize" a man whose liver has gone back on him? If a man is tortured with rheumatism, how can he be expected to be affable and agreeable? AND THEN HIES AWAY FOR DETROIT

Doesn't Show a Sign of Weariness of the Work - His Future Movements - Vice President Stevenson Addresses a Throng at Lincoln, Ills., on the Live Issues—Civil Service Commissioner Roosevelt Grinding His Knife_Political Field Notes.

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., Oct. 11.-A special St. Louis railroad, which General Manager C. H. Bosworth took personal charge of, brought Governor McKinley from Peoria to this city, which was reached at 5 p. m. United States Senator Cullom, ex-Representative Mason and Mr. I. C. Edwards (a member of the state committee), joined the party at Peoria. A stop of a minute was made at Havana, but no others were made, although at several stations there were crowds at the station which cheered as the train sped past. At the Springfield station there was a big, noisy and rather disorderly lot of men, who seemingly struggled to split their throats in yelling at Governor McKinley. and rendered it well nigh impossible for him to make his way through to the state capital, where the State league of clubs was in session.

Springfield in Holiday Dress.

'The capital city of Illinois was in holiday attire in honor of the reception. Flags, bunting, etc., were in profuse evidence. The state house was well beflagged. Representative Hall was elegantly decorated by the Democratic chief janitor of the state house, for the edification of the Illinois State Republican league. Incoming trains brought in thousands of people who wanted to see and hear the great exponent of protection. Fully 16,000 strangers were in the city, and the regular residents were nearly all on the streets.

Reception at the State Capitol. The governor was taken by a circuitous route through the streets, which were lined with boisterous enthusiasts. The hall of the house of representatives was packed, and when McKinley entered the cheers of welcome given him were deafening. C. W. Raymond, the newly elected president of the league, performed the perfunctory ceremony of making an introduction, characterizing Governor McKinley as being nearer to the hearts of the American people than any other man living in Amer-Renewed cheers, continuing for several minutes, followed the introduction, and when they partially subsided three cheers "for the next president" were given, and when it was suggested by some one to "Let her go again," three more cheers rang out. The governor's speech to the league was an appeal for them to work and see that the full vote was gotten out on election day. The Insatiate Ohio Man.

But in the course of his speech the gov ernor got in a word for Ohio. He said: "Ohio has always claimed some share in the nomination of Mr. Lincoln for the presidency. In 1860, in the city of Chicago, when the third ballot had been taken Mr. Lincoln lacked one and one-half votes to give him the nomination. There was a hushed silence through the great wigwam when Mr. D. K. Carter, of Canton, O .- an old neighbor and friend of mine who pre ceded me in congress—rose in his place and transerred three votes from Salmon P. Chase to Mr. Lincoln, making him the ' [Applause.]

At the conclusion of his speech, Governor McKinley hastened to visit the Lincoln monument and last evening addressed from a platform erected in the state house grounds an audience of thousands. 10:45 p. m. a special train on the Wabash road took the governor to Detroit, where he speaks today.

Illinois Republican Clubs.

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., Oct. 11.—Hon. L. B. Ray called the State League of Republican Clubs to order with a lively speech. There were 1,314 delegates present. Reports of the officers showed a satisfactory state of affairs. Resolutions of the standard Republican tenor were enthusiastical ly adopted and the following officers elect-President, C. W. Raymond, Watseka; one vice president from each congressional district; secretary, John A. Russell, Elgin; first assistant secretary, Robert Whittle, Bloomington; second assistant secretary, John Lynch, Jr., Olney.

VICE PRESIDENT STEVENSON.

He Addresses a Large Crowd at Lincoln on the Political Issues.

LINCOLN, Ills., Oct. 11.-Vice President Stevenson, who slipped into town unannounced, spoke to a large crowd of Democrats, making the opening address of the campaign here. He said in part: "In the presidential contest of 1892 the battle was fought and won by the Democratic party almost upon the single issue of tariff reform. Upon the issue of reduced tariff taxation upon the necessaries of life, as against high protectionism, Mr. Cleveland was elected and the Democracy restored to power. For the first time within a third of a century the Democratic party on March 4, 1893, controlled the presidency and both houses of the congress. Under these conditions the country had much to expect of the great historic party now re-stored to power. How has the party kept faith with the people?"

He replied to the question by a review of the acts of the last congress and declared them all in line with the promises of the Democratic platform. He reviewed the conditions previous to the panic of 1893, and declared that it all occurred under the McKinley law and before an arm had World's Fair Highest Medal and Diploma. been lifted to carry out the pledges of the Democratic national convention. Referring to the sugar tax he said that the bounty provided by the KcKinley bill 'amounted during the last year to the He Makes Two Speeches at the enormous sum of $12,000,000. The tariff bill just passed by a Democratic congress repealed this sugar bounty, and removed from the statute books this odious class legislation." His speech was an exhaus-tive review of the tariff acts from a Democratic standpoint.

ROOSEVELT IS GETTING RESTLESS.

He Yearns for the Scalp of Some Political Assessment Fiend.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 11.-From present in dications the civil service commission will be busy with investigation of cases of assessments for political purposes for some train made up on the Chicago, Peoria and time to come. Speaking of the prevalence of these charges Commissioner Roosevelt said: "I am glad to have a chance to say something about the matter now, as I al ways have been before presidential campaigns. Under the decision of the attorney general we cannot proceed against those persons who solicit by letter. However, we will publish broadcast what is being done and guarantee to employes that they need not pay one cent.

"If in any way molested we shall try to have criminally prosecuted those who molest these employes. We shall present the matter to congress and urge as strenuously as possible that legislation be had to punish solicitation by letter as well as in person. During the past month we have had two decisions favorable to our position—one in Ohio and the other in Kentucky-and both of the offenders have been heavily flaed. If we can get at the offenders we will have them punished as rigorously as possible.

"I want to say that no man in officewhether Democrat or Republican-is under any obligation to contribute to a campaign fund, and cannot be molested in any way by his superior officer for refusing. This assessment business is mere foul blackmail, and we intend to make a war on it in every way possible. We intend to conduct complete investigations of these

> The editor of the Michigan Democrat published at Sturgis, refering to the banquet of Gov. Felch, pays the honored ex-Governor a graceful tribute. The editor was University when Gov. Felch was a professor and lecturer in the law department. This perhaps may account for some of the vigor and incisiveness of the Democrat's editorial utteranees.

> In 1892, under Geo. W. Stone, the auditor-general's office employed an average of 48 clerks. In 1894, under Auditor-General Stanley W. Turner, the average has been 104, and at present there are 120 employed there. The state administration during the fiscal year 1894 cost the taxpayers $63,000 more for clerk hire alone than during the corresponding year of the democratic administration. But it was necessary to take care of the heelers, you know, and the dear people pay the bills.

The saving to the people brought about by the administration of sturdy old Gov. Winans stands out like an oasis in the desert of republican extravagance. It cost the people $545,495.98 less than the Luce administration which preceded it, and $757,299.36 less than the Rich administration which succeeded it. It not only lightened the burdens of the people by these vast sums, but it turned over the treasury with a cash balance of $345, 000.00. Nor can this saving be explained away, as republican organs attempt to do, by asserting that it was brought about by exhausting the supplies and emptying the treasuries of the various state institutions. In addition to the cash balance mentioned above, the democrats left $165,000.00 in the treasuries of these institutions, and a stock on hand exceeding what they received from the republicans of $313,198.76. Not a bad record for two short years of democratic rule. Let voters ponder.

Apathy or hesitation in the present state issues is something that no honest democrat can for one moment allow. No more important canvass than this of today ever called the attention or demanded the full vote of democracy. The interests at stake are not as between the characters of the men whose names lead the opposing tickets, but those of democracy and the republican party represented by those names. This is a time when true citizens are to be tried in the fire of an unflinching purpose, and the clear-headed democrat who has stood for his principles through the victories and defeats of the past thirty years will not be found wanting at the polls with his vote now. All that democracy stands for is in danger, and no bugaboo of possible defeat raised up by the republican party should frighten voters from their fealty to the truth, or from voting right in November. The voter stands with the balances of will be obliged permanently to turn prised" Rolland Lehr last Friday evenright government in his own hands, and if he now yields them to monopolistic greed and official corruption, he alone is guilty of treason. A MIRROR VISION.

The hostess, an elegantly dressed lady of 60, with abundant white hair puffed above eyes still black and bright with a fire that must once have kindled a flame in many a heart, caught the ball of conversation as it came her way.

"In my youth we never heard of this thing you call mental telegraph, theosophy and the like, but every now and then there took place, as now, occurrences which puzzled the thoughtful, though they had no name to give the phenomena. But, like most young girls, I was skeptical of all that was not directly natural when I thought of it at all, which was not often, until I had the experience I am going to tell you of, which was so strange that it upset me for some weeks, which agitation came not so much from the real shock and fright that I suffered as from the mysterious circumstances that attended it.

"My own home was a country place some 15 miles from a large city, where I had several families of relatives whom I visited once or twice a year or whenever there was to be given any ball or opera or festivity of sufficient importance for me to desire to attend it. I was just 17 when a royal personage from Europe came across the pond to get a peep at the Yankees, and though democratic to the point of being rabid every manly head was uncovered in the country, every manly throat ached with cheering this personage, and every feminine heart beat high with the hope of having the royal eye rest for a moment upon the new gown which was to be had at all hazards if the family dined on potatoes alone for a year to come.

There were to be a series of entertainments given in honor of his highness, and I. like all the rest of the world. must attend in all the finery my father's ample means allowed me. From my mother's side of the family I had inherited some very fine diamonds, amounting in value to over $10,000, and even a great deal more in those days, when this occasion I teased my lather to let me wear them.

'I had no mother to tell me that such rich jewelry was not in the best of taste on one so young and an unmarried woman, so when I started for the city I carried the diamonds with me. But my maid of my neck. I leaped to my feet with a was an elderly woman, who had also been my nurse since my motherless babyhood, and the jewels were in her care. Unfortunately, however, Marian fell ill the day after I left home, and being confined to her bed I was dependent on my aunt's maid for services in my dressing, etc. In order to lighten this woman's duties, which were heavy, as my cousins also frequently required her aid as hairdresser and seamstress, I door, which was also open and only about looked after my clothes and waited on myself as much as possible, performing such acts of my toilet as I could.

"It thus happened that one night, after returning from a reception at the house of a foreign consul, I disrobed myself of my trained evening dress, and slipping on a loose sack sat down to brush my hair before retiring. My seat was just in front of a large glass above bound, while near me lay a small dagmy dresser, or what was then called a ger, with a handle of Etruscan gold, 'bureau,' on which I had placed the studded with flawed rubies. jewelry I had worn-the diamonds I have spoken of.

"As I plied the brush my eyes naturally fell on this mirror, which reflected the room behind me, and as I continued to look I saw evolving itself apparently from empty air the figure of a man. He was well dressed, even stylishly, and was after a fashion handsome, but deathly pale, and his eyes glittered feverishly.

'He crept nearer and nearer to me, seeming to look only at the diamonds loosely strewn upon the marble before me, but his right hand was thrust into his breast, and as he stood over me he suddenly jerked it out and raised high above me a small Spanish dagger, the hilt of which was of a dead gold, or Etruscan gold, as it is called. This was set with rubies, which I noticed with that peculiar attention to trifles so often displayed in moments of danger. Up to this point I had been too terrified to call ont or even to move, not even turning my head to look around me, but watching the movements of the assassin as they were reflected in the mirror. But as he brought down his hand with a swift, murderous motion to strike me from my chair with a single blow the spell that had held me snapped, and I sprang to my feet with a shriek of terror and rushed to the door. "Even as I ran I wondered at not encountering the man, but though I could not remember afterward seeing him at all I did not stay, but unlocking the door flung it open, still screaming as fast as the sounds could issue from my lips. It happened that two of my young men cousins had lingered later than the rest of the family at the entertainment referred to, and having just come in were coming up the main staircase close to my room. Rushing to these, I 'N I low hit's strange-uv the fo'ty-seven threw myself into the arms of the nearest, Christopher, shrieking, 'The man, the man!'

"The two young men hurried to my room and looked about, but could see no one. The windows were all fastened, and as I had myself just come out of the single door to the apartment, and from which no one else could have slipped without our seeing him, the only chance was for the burglar to have concealed himself in the room.

'By this time the rest of the household was aroused, and not only my room, but the entire place, was thoroughly searched. The three windows of the room were provided with heavy old fashioned shutters, two of them opening on the street, an unbroken descent of over 40 feet, while the other had not been unclosed for years, for it looked almost into one in the next house, which was also seen to be tightly secured. The house itself was occupied by a respectable family in straitened circumstances. It therefore seemed an impossibility for a man to have entered the room unseen by me and to have made his escape in the few seconds it took my cousins to reach the spot where I had seen him. So it was thought that I had fallen asleep in my chair, and my vision had been the result of my late supper of minced chicken and champagne, and though I was still shivering from my fright I allowed myself to be almost persuaded that this was the real truth.

"By the next night I had so thorough. ly been laughed into believing this that I took my seat before the mirror and began brushing my hair as nonchalantly as at first, when to my utter horror I saw that figure form itself from nothing, absolutely nothing, and again advance upon me with that menacing attitude. Again it raised its hands to strike, the terrible eyes seemed to glare into mine, fixed on them in the mirror, and, as before, released from the horror that held me stricken into marble. I leaped to my feet and ran screaming into the corridor without. I glance back into the room, but there was no one visible there, but I was not to be convinced this time that an overheated imagination was to blame. I fled to my aunt's door, and as she opened it fell fainting in her arms. I was not to be stirred from my belief that my life had been threatened in that dreadful room by all the searchig and arguments that were made and announced my intention of returning home in the morning. "But the next night was to be that of the grand ball given in honor of the prince, and that, with the fact that I had the prettiest gown in the city to wear, finally prevailed on me to alter my mind, though I made it a condition that Marian, my maid, was to occupy a little antechamber opening into mine, and that my stalwart cousin, Christopher, who was afterward my loved husband for nearly 40 years, was to sleep on a cot in the hall just outside my door. So with a contented mind I went to the ball, returning late to find my good maid asleep, and as she was still not well I crept quietly in and proceeded to undress.

"I let down my hair, and, though too fatigued, as usual, to brush it, sat for these gems were not so common, and on some moments looking at myself in the broker in a humble way. I was a little vain in those day -when all at once I saw behind me the man with his knife in his hand.

"But this time he did not evolve from air, but was there, real flesh and blood, his hot breath nearly scorching the back scream, and as I did so he struck at me, but the blade glanced aside, wounding me only slightly in the shoulder. I screamed aloud, and he felled me with a blow just as Marian and Christopher came rushing in. Seeing them, the robber and assassin sprang for the open window and would have escaped by leaping—an easy feat for a muscular man-in the window of the house next three feet distant. This had evidently been the way by which he had entered and which he used as an egress. But Christopher caught him and dragged him back, and after a struggle secured him, aided by his brothers, who had been summoned by Marian, so when I or ened my eyes from my swoon it was to see the would be murderer lying

"But here is the strange part of the story: On the night of his capture he had entered my room for the first time, though on the two previous nights he had watched me through the shutters of the two windows. He was the son of the family residing next door, and from the love of dress and pleasure beyond his means had involved himself hopelessly in debt, and seeing my diamonds had conceived the idea of killing or at least silencing me and stealing them to pay his debts. But though his mind had dwelt persistently on the scheme he had lacked courage to carry it out until the night of the ball, when, pressed by an importunate creditor, he had let himself into the room, where he had concealed himself until my arrival, not knowing of the protectors I had been warned to have near me."-Philadelphia Times.

Gambling In Calcutta.

Gambling on the next rain and its duration has become so great a vice in Calcutta that the government has been called on to suppress it. Clerks on the way to their offices stop at commission houses to place bets, and the women have been seized with the mania, so that they do not only pawn their own and borrowed jewels, but go further to procure money to gamble with. The bookmakers risk no money of their own and charge a small commission for handling the bets. —Pittsburg Dispatch.

THE BROTHERS.

Ride we out at the dawning of day-Gray are the hills and a blush on the sky— Up between fields where the dew frosts lav. Jack and Harold and I.

Can ever an hour with this compare? Is ever a bloom like a waking one? Ho, for the breath of the unwarmed air That knows not the kiss of the sun!

Over the highway and down the hill Speed we well like the wings of a bird, A reddening east and a warming thrill-The world has awaked and stirred! A sudden ray and a cock's shrill call.

A salty scent from the sea blown down, A thought of the work that awaits us all And yonder the spires of the town! Back we ride at the closing of day,
Met by the breath that the brier sheds,
And a bird that is flying to west away,

And one star over our heads. Can ever an hour with this compare, When the day and the night are almost on :.

Filling the sky and the silent air, Hushed at the death of the sun? Back 'tween the dewy fields we ride, Under the deepening heart of the sky, Passing the bridge and the hill's steep side-

And down by the mill will one of us wait Wait for the wave of a hand, for a smile, And over the hill, by a vine clad gate, Will one of us linger awhile.

Jack and Harold and I.

One rideth on, rideth on for a space. Then, oh, the scent of the white rose bloom, And the joy in a mother's face!

A BIRTHDAY GIFT.

It might have happened in London or it might not. If any one prefers to localize this story of true love at Liverpool or Glasgow or any other British city where Irish do live, he or she is quite welcome to do so. I am not going to vulgarize a tender idyl by giving with the fidelity of a county court summons the precise town, village or other minute description of the scene where the poetic events to be now told took Mat Casey lodged with Tim Brennan. who occupied a couple of rooms in a small house in a court off a passage in an alley which branched out of a lane in a back street. "Sure you're a gintleman, for you're as good as the pig that pays his rint," Tim used to say to him, and Mat would reply, "True for yez, an it's meself that's proud to be that same." And then, if either happened to have a shilling about him, they would go to the Cobwebs inn and drink it. If in luck, they would perhaps have a fight or two in the course of the night. If things were depressed and people were low spiritedly peaceful, they would in most cases have a fight between themselves and then fraternally pump on each other's heads or repair their faces from the same stock of sticking plaster.

Mat was a traveling tinker, middle aged, jovial, ugly, a fine drinker, a good singer, and, as Tim said, "a dhivil of a poet." Tim was an odd job character-an auction porter and a speculator in small lots. Mat was a widower. Tim had an extensive wife and a scattered family.

At the entrance to the court was a sort of half shop, half shed, with a big room behind and a small one above, where Widow Moloney lived and carried on her business, which consisted in the purchase and sale of anything from an old bedstead to a coverless dictionary and from a broken candlestick to an indistinct oil painting. Her husband had been an attendant at sales and a

After the inquest on him—now some 18 months ago—Mrs. Moloney continued the concern. She found it unnecessary to go to auctions, as Tim and others brought their purchases to her, and she had a tolerably ready means of buying and selling, not merely to add from her neighbors, but also, being well known, among the inhabitants generally in a small way.

She was about 40 and weighed 18 stone. A big shawl was always crossed over her opulent bosom and knotted behind. She had a bright eye, a ready tongue, a heavy fist and a strong head.

Mat was deeply enamored of this gentle lady. Of course Tim was in his confidence, and many an untruthful word in praise of Mat did he drop, as if by accident, in her hearing, and many an unveracious account of his broken heartedness on her account did he sighingly narrate, with the addition of his own private opinion that Mat was dving or would kill himself for love of her. Tim was as loval a friend as a sober though truthful knight of old.

"Tim," said Mat on the eve of Widow Moloney's birthday, "I want yez to give her this birthday card from me. It's a great red heart, with a skewer sticking in it. That riprisints moinethe heart, I mane. The skewer". "It's an arrow, Mat-that's what they do be calling it." 'Well, Tim, an there's a good Irish sound about that same. They can't do without us anyway, you see.' "Sorra a bit, an you want me to be afther giving her that?" "Yes; I've improved it. I've made it dhrops, as if it was the blood of me heart that was flowing for her, an she's so scornful of me sufferings. "It's illigant" said Tim, with great admiration.

"An see here, now. I've written some varses to her to the tune of 'O'Shaughnessy's Hat.' Bedad, an they rowl as swately as a jig an as deludhering as the crayther.

He sang them over in his rich voice and delicious brogue, and Tim got excited and promised his most devoted aid. Then they went to the Cobwebs and in due course were violently ejected, had a tussle with some strangers about something of which they had no particular notion or recollection, lost each other and finally got home somehow, though separately.

Next morning they arose with unclouded and unaching brows, and Tim started on his mission. Mat waited at the Cobwebs for his return.

Tim sat down on a cold doorstep and reflected. 'Take her a dhirty, painted, twopenny piece of paper with a red lead heart on ic. Bedad an begorra an I won't! I'll do better than that, or my name's not rosion. They are standard, and Tim Brennan. Mat's a decent bhoy an always a dhivil of a poet, but widdies is practical. It takes the likes of me to understand the likes of them." Within 10 minutes after this soliloguy he was seated in Mrs. Moloney's disordered and unventilated room.

"There it is, Mrs Moloney, dear, an it must go to the heart of yez to rade the hidden m'aning," said he as he pointed to a large, healthy looking pig's fry on the table and a bottle of whisky which was standing beside it. He had suppressed the paper missive as poor, artificial and inexpressive, and out of his devoted friendship and slender purse had bought the "pluck" and the spirits which he presented in Mat's name.

"It's an emblim, honey," continued "Here's his heart, in a manner of sp'aking, at your fate-on your dish, I mane. The liver shows that he can't live without yez; the lights, that you're the light of his eyes, an that he longs for yez with every breath, an the flare, that there'll be all the fat in the fire an the very dhivil to pay if ye're unkind to him an refuse him. It's an imblim, my dear-a delicate poetical imblim, bedad!"

"It's beautiful!" said Mrs. Moloney, profoundly touched, as she uncorked the bottle and filled up two large port glasses. Then she added: "An I'll cook it. Tell him to come tonight an help ate it. An come you, too, Tim, and Misthriss Brennan.

So it was all understood.

Tim had, like most of his countrymen, the feelings of a gentleman and the tact of a courtier. That was why he and his wife arrived designedly late, having sent a message that supper was not to

Had they come sooner a slight incident might have been avoided, though possibly it all happened for the best.

For, leaving the tete-a-tete meal and the conversations to be imagined by the reader, the crumpled rose leaf arose in this way. Mat had lit his pipe and had asked the widow how she liked the card and the verses.

She laughed and replied that she didn't know about the verses, except those he had been talking for the last hour; but, as for the card, he ought to know, for he had eaten the half of it. Upon this, Mat had jumped off his chair and exclaimed: "Then it's a dead man I am, an it's a wake I'll be afther attending, an not a wedding! I thought there was a quare taste about that piece of frizzled fat." "What does the crature be m'aning at into his seat. "Poisoned, you black hearted villain?" screamed Mrs. Moloney. "Then take that!" and she broke a jug on his

It was at this point that the Brennans arrived. Tim promptly knocked Mat down, and then he naturally became curious to know what the ambiguity was about.

"He's poisoned me!" said she between a shriek and a sob.

Tim seized Mat and threw him on an incomplete but unmatched dinner service, part of Mrs. Moloney's stock, which stood in a corner on the floor.

The widow, hearing the crash, smashed a chair on Tim's back, whereupon Mrs. Brennan took her by the hair, and the two women fell into some miscel laneous lots in another corner. Then the neighbors came in and took indiscriminate sides, and matters generally hummed for a short time.

Eventually Tim got an inkling of the difficulty, told them to be quiet and narrated all the circumstances, to the great relief, joy and amusement of all head.

A pailful of water and a yard or two of sticking plaster, with a few pins for the women, quickly set things smooth and smiling. Mrs. Moloney made them all welcome, and soon liberal supplies of whisky, porter and tobacco were formulated. Additional candles were lit, illuminating fitfully the front shop, whose contents seemed the embodiment of the confused thoughts of the guests -tables stacked with their legs in the air, cane chairs hanging on the walls, blank gaseliers suspended from the ceiling, while a lighted lamp stood on the floor to prevent stumbling into the business portion of the establishment, and all went merrily. Mrs. Moloney for one brief ecstatic moment sat on Mat's knee, but they were severally picked up and revived, though the chair was pulverized, and Mat sang the "varses" which Tim had produced from his pocket along with the card.

Tim had applauded, wept and gone to sleep in the middle of the song, but the approval which greeted its conclusion, composed as it was of shouts, shrieks, knockings, tears and a free fight in the southeastern corner, effectually woke

The peculiar circumstances of the case fascinated him great-'Decidedly I should be a detective,' he said laughingly. "I have been inventing all kinds of theories in connection with this matter. By the way, my idea of searching the shipping list was a good one."

'Excellent. You received my letter?" "I did, with much pleasure. So Francis did not arrive in England until the 6th of June?"

"No! Therefore it was Francis whom I met at the Fen inn, who was killed by his brother, and it is Felix who now passes himself off to Olivia Bellin as Francis.

"Does she not guess the imposture?" "No. So far as I can see, she firmly believes Felix to be Francis. You were also right about the hiding of the

"During which time he disposed of his brother's body?' "Precisely. I tracked his horse's hoof marks to the pool wherein I am convinced the body lies hidden."

"Egad! You are a wonderful man, Denham. Did you have the pool dragged for the body?" "Not yet. I wished to tell you all my discoveries before doing so." 'Many thanks. I am so interested in this case that it is a great pleasure for me to follow it step by step. "I wish no thanks from you, Merrick," said I heartily. "It is rather the other way, as your reasonings have led me to these important discoveries: First, that Felix was in Paris: second, that Francis did not arrive from Chile till this month. and, third, that Felix himself hid the corpse. By myself I should never have discovered so much. But I have made one most famous discovery." "Yes? And that is?"

"I know how the crime was committed and by whom." 'You don't say so!" exclaimed Merrick in much excitement. "Have you seen Strent?"

"No. It was not Strent who killed Francis Briarfield."

'You don't mean to say is was Rose Strent?"

'No. It was Felix himself." Merrick uttered an exclamation of surprise and remained silent for a few was mistaken. Fundy, the livery stable keeper, told me that Felix hired a horse from him on the 10th and 11th of June. On both occasions he did not return till midnight. Now, Francis was murdered on the 10th, and his corpse disappeared on the 11th. Felix is therefore responsible for both the murder and the concealment of the body." 'That is purely circumstantial evidence. I laid down the arrowhead on the

"This is proof positive," I said triumphantly. 'With that piece of flint Francis was killed."

"Really," said Merrick skeptically, picking up the arrowhead. "With such a clumsy instrument he must have bungled the job considerably."

"Not at all. That arrowhead is steeped in virulent poison."

"The deuce!" cried Merrick, dropping it hastily. "Why did you not warn me of its danger? I might have cut myself and gone the same way as poor Francis Briarfield. How do you know the murder was so executed?"

"I told you about the discolored wound in the palm of the right hand.' Merrick nodded.

"Well," I continued, "that was the cause of death, as there was neither scratch nor violence on any other part of the body. I picked up that arrowhead in the fireplace of the dining room of the Fen inn, where it had doubtless been thrown by Felix after the committal of the crime." "Where did he get the arrowhead?"

'That is just what puzzled me for a long time. Fortunately I remembered that the entrance to Bellin Hall was decked with a perfect armory of savage weapons. I made an excuse of looking at the picture gallery and so gained admission to the hall."

"Did you find anything likely to confirm your suspicions?"

'Yes. I found that an arrow had been removed from the wall." 'How could you tell that?" "Because the weapons were arranged in patterns, and one of the patterns was incomplete. Moreover, on comparing that arrowhead with those on the wall I found it was precisely similar in appearance.'

'Humph,'' said Merrick thoughtfully. "There is only one deduction to be taken from all this. Felix stole the arrowhead, and knowing it to be poisoned rode to the Fen inn to kill his brother. He is a clever scoundrel."

'Very clever indeed,'' I answered dryly. "But for you, Merrick, he would once. "I can't take it up now," said the caretaker civilly. "Mr. Briarfield is engaged and gave particular orders that he was not to be disturbed.'

"Ah, but doubtless he is engaged with a friend of mine," I hinted ambiguously.

'Is the lady a friend of yours, sir?" A lady! My thoughts at once reverted to Rose Strent, but then the chances were that it might be Olivia.

Mr. Briarfield is engaged?" asked the caretaker, who was a confirmed gossip.

"Yes. Miss Bellin."

"It is not her, sir. I know her well by sight, as she has been here with Mrs. Bellin. It's another lady."

My surmise was right, and I felt confident that while I stood there Felix was having an interview with his accomplice. I could not disturb them, yet wished to assure myself of the identity of Rose Strent. When I found out all about her, there might be a possibility of solving the mystery.
"Well, no matter," I answered care-

Having thus baffled the inquiries of "They are now in town-Mrs. and the caretaker, I strolled into the street, and taking up my station at the corner kept my eyes on the door. If Rose Strent was with Felix, she must certainly come out in a short time. Then I intended to follow her up and speak to her if I got a chance. Failing Briarfield, I might possibly extort a confession from the weaker vessel.

In about a quarter of an hour the woman came out. She wore no veil, and as it was still fairly light I had no difficulty in seeing her face. She passed hurriedly by me in the direction of the Haymarket without observing me, and I recognized her at a glance. It was, as I thought, Rose Strent and none other. In place of the waiting maid's linen dress, she was arrayed in a smart tailor made costume and looked very fashionable indeed. Her face wore a triumphant expression, as though she had been successful with Felix. I guessed the interview had been for the purpose of extorting blackmail. With her knowledge of his secret Felix was certainly at her mercy.

Following her up at some little distance, she went down the Haymarket and turned down one of the side streets, turned off there into a dirty alley and

CHAPTER X. When I told Dr. Merrick of my good fortune in finding Rose Strent, or, to use her stage name, Rose Gernon, he on Felix. His rooms were in Jermyn was considerably astonished. The case street, and as mine were just around had taken hold of him so completely the corner in Duke street I had not far to that he could think of nothing else. He go. My visit was paid on the chance of had a large practice and attended fairly finding him in, as I did not wish to put well to his patients, but informed me him on his guard by notifying him of my that he did so in a mechanical fashion, more or less, as his brain was busy with the Fen inn mystery. We were now wonderfully familiar, considering the short period of our acquaintance, but this was doubtless due to the interest we both took in the case. "Upon my word, Denham," said Merrick, rubbing his head irritably, "I wish you had not come near me with your hallucinations. Instead of attending to my business, I think of nothing but your mysteries. The sooner we unravel this riddle the better will it be for me. You are an idle bachelor, so it does not matter much to you, but I am a busy medical man, and this infernal business worries me greatly. At this moment I ought to be attending to a patient, instead of which I am wasting my time with you."

"Shall I go away?" "No, confound you! I wish to see the end of this affair, or I'll get no peace of mind. It is too late to remedy the matter, so I must have my curiosity allayed by learning all the ins and outs of this enigma. Come, let us begin. You have found Rose Strent?"

"Yes. She is a burlesque actress and plays at the Frivolity theater. Her name in the programme is set down as

"I'm not so sure of that," said Merrick sharply. "If she went into that Fen inn business with her eyes open, she doubtless took a false name, so as to baffle inquiry.' "Then what about the landlord, who called himself Edward Strent?"

"Oh, we must find out all about him also. No doubt his name is false also. Did he look like her father?"

"Well, I can't say that there was much likeness between them. He looked to me like a valet."

"A valet," muttered Merrick reflect-"That's the young lady, sir, to whom ively. "Queer! I wonder if he really was a valet-valet to Felix."

"In that case he'll be with him now." "It is not impossible. He has Felix" in his power and can stay on just as he likes. It's my opinion he'll stay till he's pensioned off. Case of blackmail, I

"I think Rose Gernon is blackmailing Felix also.'

"Quite so. What else can he expect? else," added Merrick, looking straight at me, "it's a case of love and marriage."

"What! Do you think Felix promised to marry Rose if she helped him to get rid of his brother?'

"I think he might lead her to believe he would do so.'

"This is absurd, Merrick," said I sharply. "Felix is in love with Olivia. The motive of the crime was to gain possession of Olivia's hand. Rose would not help Felix if she knew that.'

"Precisely. If she knew it. But it's my opinion that she does not know it I believe Felix gulled her into belief that he would marry her if she gave her assistance, but he has not the slightest intention of keeping his promise.'

"And what excuse could he make for wishing to murder his brother?'

"Ah, there you have me! I don't know that. Of course you and I are aware of the real motive of the crime, but Rose is ignorant of it. She thinks she knows, no doubt, but I'm certain she been put off with a lie.

"But he can't keep the information from her for ever. Even if he keeps quiet, some one is bound to tell her that Felix is engaged to Miss Bellin.

"There you are wrong," said Merrick, with grim jocularity. "Every one thinks Francis is engaged to Miss Bel-"Yes, but Rose Gernon knows well enough that Francis is dead, and that the engaged man must be Felix posing as Francis. "There's some truth in that," admitted the doctor, looking puzzled. "I suppose he must have kept that fact from her so far, as I don't see what possible explanation he could give her.

"Always assuming she is in love with him," said I musingly.

"Oh, as to that, I am certain it is so. A woman like Rose Gernon drawing a good salary would not mix herself up in such a dangerous business merely for money. There is a stronger motive, and that is love. I'll lay anything," continued Merrick, in sporting phrase, 'I'll lay anything that she is madly in love with the fellow."

"Well, and Olivia, thinking Felix is Francis, loves him madly also. If these two women come together, there will be trouble for Felix."

"Eureka!" cried the doctor, jumping up excitedly, "the very thing. When thieves fall out-you know the adage. Let us bring the two women together and see the upshot.

"There will simply be a row," said I. "What is the use of that?"

"This," retorted Merrick sharplytrayed she will reveal all the mystery out of revenge and assure Olivia that Felix is not Francis." -

"That's not a bad idea, Merrick; also it might occur that Olivia reveals something in her turn."

"Impossible. She can't possibly know the man's villainy, else she would not think of marrying him." "I suppose not, and yet," I added reflectively, "I wouldn't be surprised if she were cognizant of Felix's movements on the 10th and 11th. She certainly stuck up for him in the most amazing manner at the first interview.'

"Of course she did, because she believes he is Francis. Depend upon it, doctor, she knows nothing, and if we bring her and Rose together there will be a revolution and a revelation." "It's worth trying at all events. But how can it be managed?" "By working on the natural jealousy of the sex. Tell Olivia that Felix receives a woman in his rooms every evening.

"Oh, hang it, Merrick," said I, reddening, "it wouldn't be delicate even to a married woman, let alone a girl." "Of course I don't mean you to put it to her in that barefaced manner," said Merrick hastily, "but handle the matter delicately. Wrap it up in sugar. I leave it to your own judgment. In any case you must rouse the jealousy of Miss Olivia Bellin and induce her to come with you to the chambers of Felix when he is interviewing Rose."

"She wouldn't come without her mother." "Then bring her mother along with you. This is a serious matter, and it doesn't do to be squeamish." "Then do it yourself," said I angrily.

"I!" said he, taken aback. "No. I don't know Miss Bellin. You are the proper person. Besides it's better that she should know the truth, even at the cost of a shock to her delicacy, than be tied to a brute like Felix, as she certainly will be."

"Not if Rose can help it." "She can't help it if she doesn't know. And the only way to spoil the game of Felix is to bring the two women face to face. Their mutual jealousy will do the rest, and instead of going to the altar Felix Briarfield will find himself bound for the scaffold."

"True enough. Well, I'll try, Merrick, but it's a job I don't like. He laughed at my scruples and tried to show me that I was really doing Olivia a service in being so plain spoken, but in spite of all his arguments I departed from his house in low spirits. | mistake!'

She sent down a message to the effect that she was unwell and asked me to excuse her, but I scribbled a few lines on my card asking particularly to see her. This time the servant returned with the information that Miss Bellin would see me for a few minutes, and I was shown into the drawing room. I felt nervous, but, determined to go through with the matter, managed to unpleasant task, but very necessary if I wanted to attain my object. When Miss Bellin entered, I could not suppress a start, so changed was she in outward appearance. As I said before, she was a tall, well developed and very beautiful woman, but now she had grown thin, and her face wore an anxious expression. I could not help thinking that she knew something about the tragedy at the lone inn, as I could conjecture no other reason for her ill health and manifest discomposure. She came forward, with a nervous smile, and greeted me in a low voice.

"My mother and Mr. Briarfield have gone to Hurlingham," she said, sitting down on a lounge near which my chair was placed.

"I am not sorry for that," I answered gray "as I wish to see you alone.

"What is the matter, Mr. Denham? Have you anything very torrible to tell

"I think it is terrible." "About Francis?" she demanded anxiously.

"Yes. About Francis." "Surely you are not going to begin Olivia passed her handkerchief across her lips and gave a sigh of relief. The expression of her face was so strange that I was more than ever convinced she suspected the truth. 'I am glad you have given over that mad idea about Francis being Felix," "that when Rose finds she has been be-trayed she will reveal all the mystery what made you take up so strange a belief. Felix is in Paris.

"I know that, Miss Bellin. I saw him there '

This I said in the hope of startling her, but she did not move a muscle of her face. Either she was keeping well in hand or was cognizant of the fact that Felix had gone to Paris for the purpose of deceiving me. If so, she must have known he was not Francis, and also that my story of the lone inn tragedy was true. It was on my tongue to ask her if she was aware of the terrible truth, but on reflection I judged it best to let events evolve themselves. Fate could manage these things better than a mere mortal.

"I knew you would see him there," she said coldly, "but I cannot conceive why you should desire to convince yourself that I spoke truly.

"Because, Miss Bellin, I believe that the man who calls himself Francis is really Felix."

"The same old story," she said impatiently. "You are mad. If you saw Felix in Paris, you must be convinced that you are making a mistake."

"Well, Miss Bellin, we will waive that point for the present. I will call the man to whom you are engaged Francis.'

"As he is," she interpolated imperiously. I let the remark pass and went on with my speech. "You will no doubt think me highly impertinent, but I wish to warn you against the so called Francis Briarfield." "What do you mean, sir?"

"Simply this: While at the Fen inn I was waited on by a woman who called herself Rose Strent. That woman is now in town acting at the Frivolity theater under the name of Rose Gernon."

"And what have I to do with such a creature?" she asked in a trembling "Nothing, but your lover has everything to do with her." "Mr. Denham!"

We were both on our feet by this time, and she was looking at me with wrathful eyes. The crisis I so dreaded had come, but it was now too late to retreat, and there was no help for it but "Be angry with me if you like, Miss

Bellin," I said as soon as I was able, "but it is in your own interest I speak." 'My own interest!"

"Yes. This woman Rose Gernon is in love with Francis B"--"No, no!" she murmured, her face

World's Fair HIGHEST MEDAL

awarded to

Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder

The highest award was given on every claim, comprising superiority in leavening power, keeping properties, purity and excellence. This verdict has been given by the best jury ever assembled for such a purpose, backed by the recommendation of the Chief Chemist of the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., who made an elaborate examination and test of all the baking powders. This is pre-eminently the highest authority on such matters in America.

This verdict conclusively settles the question and proves that Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder is superior in every way to any other brand.

Note. - The Chief Chemist rejected the Alum baking powders, stating to the World's Fair jury that he considered them unwholesome.

TEMPERANCE PARADE AT CHICAGO Thousands of School Children March to the Music of Teetotalism.

CHICAGO, Oct. 11.—The temperance de monstration of school children was a great success, and thousands were in line, while other thousands lined the streets of the route of march. The column was headed by a platoon of police, a band and the Chicago Hussars. In the balcony at the Auditorium were Governor Altgeld, Mayor Hopkins, Bishop Watterson, Barrows, Dr. Hensen, Dr. Rumsey, Chief Marshal Burbank, members of the executive committee and a number of wellknown temperance workers.

It was the first time in the history of the city when Protestants and Roman Catholics joined in a demonstration, and many of the children were those of Roman Cath olic parochial schools. Besides these the ranks were swelled by the children of many other parochial and private schools. There were four divisions of the parade and it presented a very interesting sight Last night a mass-meeting was held at the Auditorium which was packed.
