SAD LIFE OF A BEAUTY.

The Countess of Dudley a Devoted Wife to a Repulsive Husband.

Georgina, countess of Dudley, enjoys the great ladies of Mayfair. She is a devoted mother and deserves a great erate wor. at Port Hudson. About one amount of credit for the manner in which she has brought up her children and for the devoted care and loyalty which she manifested to her eccentric husband. Until his death her existence was little better than a martyrdom, which she bore with the most exemplary patience and fortitude. The late earl was many years her senior and the reverse of handsome, in addition to which he in many matters was entirely insane, having inherited his madness from his father. All this would have caused military genius of the great soldier as man, but Lady Dudley's mother, Lady Louisa Moncrieffe, dazzled by the earl's income of over $3,000,000 a year, forced her levely daughter to bind herself to and the brevet of brigadier general.

The contrast between the beautiful by the volunteer service. woman and the almost repulsive looking husband who was her constant companion was so startling that it drew forth the hackneyed exclamation of "beauty and the beast" wherever they went. Had Lord Dudley been less wealthy he would inevitably have been confined in a madhouse, but even during the closing years of his life Lady Dudley never permitted him to be considered as insane, although he seldom experienced lucid moments. Lady Dudley was the second wife of the late earl and has seven children, six sons and one daughter. - Philadelphia Press.

I'm a Manxman, and I have inherited gloves even in your winters, and much of the time I go without an overcoat. The general about this time had noticed my fall, and apparently no one had heard my cry, for the ship kept right on. There I was, with heavy boots and a heavy coat, alone amid the waves of the Atlantic. You may not believe me, but I did not feel greatly alarmed. I managed to get out of my boots and coat, and then I began to swim to keep myself afloat. Somehow I felt that I should be saved. We had passed a vessel about sunset, and I thought she'd come along and pick me up. I had been a good swimmer all my life, and I kept afloat till daybreak, when that other vessel did come along and fish me out, four hours after I fell in. We got into New York three days after my ship arrived, and when I came aboard, as she lay at her wharf, my mates took me for a ghost. - New York Sun.

Generals Badeau and Cooke Pass to Eternal Sleep.

GRANT'S HISTORIAN AND HIS WORK.

Career in the Army a Gallant and Useful One_A Man of Varied Accomplishments His History of the "Old Commander" -His Diplomatic and Literary Achievements-Gen. Cooke a Loyal Southerner in 1861 and Hero of Many Wars.

NEW YORK, March 21.—General Adam Badeau died at Ridgewood, N. J., yesterday, aged 64 years. He was on the staff of General Grant as military secretary, and afterward served as secretary of the American legation in London. General Badeau was a national character for many years, and owed his celebrity largely to his friendship for General Grant, the latter's regard for him and the work he did since Grant's death as the biographer of the great soldier His death was caused by apoplexy. The general was stricken at about 5 o'clock Tuesday afternoon while talking with his adopted son, George Corsa. The two had been together about fifteen minutes when the general began to gasp, and fell back into the arms of Mr. Corsa, dying in a few minutes. During the past six months the general had to undergo several operations to remove cataracts from his eyes. He had resided with George Corsa and Miss Chillman, his adopted children, since last fall.

Wounded While Leading a Charge. General Badeau was born in this city in December, 1831 In his boyhood he was put in the hands of a private tutor, and was afterward sent to a boarding school at Tarrytown, N. Y. In 1862 he volunteered in the military service of the United States, and his first appointment was on the staff of Brigadier General Thomas W. the well deserved reputation of being Sherman. > His Connection with Gen. Grant. While serving in a capacity the duties of which brought him so close to the commander of the government's forces during the year following, Colonel Badeau had ample opportunity to see General Grant's personality in all its phases, and he was probably as familiar with the private character, foibles, magnanimity and many a mother to hesitate before even any other man who touched the general's permitting her daughter to wed such a sphere. He accompanied Grant through the campaigns of the Wilderness and of a ppomattox, and served on the staff until March, 1869, when he was retired from the army with the full rank of captain was also rewarded with a similiar brevet

Successful as a Diplomat,

It was in May, 1869, that General Badeau entered the diplomatic service, receiving an appointment as secretary of the London legation. He served in that capacity for six months. In 1870 he was sent to Madrid as the bearer of important government dispatches, and in May of that year returned to London as consul general, which office he held until 1881. His diplomatic career was long and suc-During the two years of 1877 and 1878 he was given leave of absence from his duties in London, and was one of the party that accompanied Grant on the famous tour of the world. He was recalled from his position in London by President Garfield, and one year later was given the consul generalship at Havana. In this position he served until 1884, when rugged constitution. I seldom wear he resigned because he was not permittedt by the department of state to substantiate certain charges of corruption which he had made against it.

Was an Author as Well. He also had the satisfaction of beating Uncle Sam in two cases where he was charged with drawing too much money in yardarm into the sea. No one on deck began to grow tired of a diplomatic life. In 1875 he was given an opportunity to go to Brussels as United States minister, but declined. Later, in 1881, when he was tendered a mission to Copenhagen he declined that place, too. All his life he was a literary man, writing for the papers and also being the author of a number of books, the most important of which was his "Military History of Ulysses S. Grant." He also later wrote "Grant in Peace." His contributions to periodical literature in the way of articles, covering a wide range of subjects, have been valuuable and meritorious. His Opinion of Gen. Grant.

Whatever fame as a writer Badeau has must rest on his volumes relating to Grant, and they are all works of great He it was who termed General Grant "Grant, the Hammer," because he declared that he smote the stone wall of the Confederacy and left it in ruins. He held that General Grant's greatness culminated during the last year of the civil war, when he was in command of the national armies. He was a good president, but a great soldier, and it was upon these lines that General Badeau became Grant's biographer. Writing of the "Old Commander" he says: "He was so simple, so and every case of catarrh that cannot be cured by the use of Hall's Catarrh Cure.

DETROIT, March 21:-General Philip St. George Cooke died at his home in this city and mucous surfaces of the system. George Cooke died at his home in this city send for testimonials, free.

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O. Cooke was a native of Virginia and was 85 years of age. His career had been identified with the army since his admission to West Point when only 14 years of age, but he was also a member of the bar of Virginia, and had written several interesting works, among which are a volume of cavalry tactics, "Scenes and Adventures in the Army," and "New Mexico and California." General Cooke had seen service in every field where American valor has been displayed for fifty-seven years. In the Black Hawk war was a leading officer. He was in high command in the conquest of California and New Mexico. He dispersed the L'pans in 1853, and later led a raid against the Apaches. He was com-mander of the department of Utah when rebellion broke out in the land. Upon the breaking out of the rebellion, unlike most southern officers—including his own son, General John R. Cooke, and his famous son-in-law, General J. E. B. Stuart-he cast his sword in the balance for the Union. He became commander of the cavalry reserve of the army of the Potomac, and participated in all the im-portant events in the Peninsular cam-paign, at Gaines' Mill directly opposing his son-in-law, General Stuart.

He afteward superintended the recruiting service, and in 1966 he took command of the department of the Platte. He was the division of the lakes at Detroit. In 1874 he was retired, after forty-six years of continuous service, with the rank of brigadier general. He had lived in De troit ever since. NO LONGER A WHISKY TRUST.

Gen. McNulta Gives His Views of the Tangle loot Situation.

CHICAGO, March 21. - General McNulta and E. F. Lawrence, receivers for the whisky trust, were in consultation and the former stated that he was utterly at a loss to understand the motive of the sensational articles published in the morning papers or the authority for their origin. These articles implied and with the aid of the very useful "it is alleged" stated that the yicking open of the whisky trust safe at Peoria had supplied proof against the late managers of various crimes, and given the receivers the foundation for suits against said managers aggregating hundreds of thousands.

He was then asked what truth there was in the statement published in the New York Sun of March 14 that the Wine and Spirit Gazette would fight the organization of a new whisky trust to the death. He said: "The Spirit Distilling association, formed of Feb. 21, is not a whisky trust. There has been no whisky trust formed and there is no intention of forming one. There has simply been a conference among the spirit distilling in terests of the country to prevent the enormous losses that were being sustained. Their agreement prevents the possibility of a trust. The essential principle under which they act is that the prices of spirits in the market shall be based absolutely upon the cost of production.

"The producers are to have a profit of one-half of 1 per cent. per proof gallon for their spirits, and no more. They are entitled to this as a legitimate profit, and it may be fairly inferred that this clamor is raised for the benefit of the stock gamblers in New York. They seek to destroy the business interest of the receivership, that they may profit on their speculations If that interest can be eliminated the business of the receivership will be an absolute success, and as it appears now its success is assured anyhow, and they are simply growling because they see defeat in front of them.

SPEINGFIELD, March 21.—The city civil service reform bul was the principal matter before the senate, and after Littler and Solomon had made vigorous speeches against the bill and against the principles on which it was based it passed with an emergency clause-38 to 10. The governor has signed it so that it can be acted upon it in cities at the April elections and the amendments he proposed will be adopted in a bill amendatory of the one just passed. A Scrap of Paper.

Not long ago, says a writer in Too Realm, I was walking in the garden in Hawarden with Mr. Clad tons would you do with that?" he said suddenly, pointing to a bit of newspaper lying on the lawn. "I think I'd pick it up and take it away," I answered, astonished. "Ah! Well, this is what I do with it," said Mr. Gladstone. Thereupon he placed the point of his walking stick on the middle of the scrap of paper, twisted the stick round and round, and with much dexterity left the bit of paper in the soil and out of sight. What to Leave a Son

If my choice were free, I would rather give my boy the memory of a fairly happy and untrammeled life up to 20 and leave him nothing then but a consequent reasonable optimism, an un-PORT sapped courage and a disposition to regard money as a means rather than an end than keep him constantly face to face with a specter of possible poverty, fill him full of premature cares and leave him $5,000 or $25,000 a year and no memories, or well ground, healthy tastes, or world to live in indeed except such as he commonly sets out to make for himself under these circustances, which is worse than nothing. - Scrib ner's Magazine.

Truthful.

"General Grant was," says Gener Horace Porter in McClure's Magazin "without exception the most absolutely truthful man I ever encountered in public or private life. He was not only MERCHANTS, truthful himself, but he had a horror of untruth in others." An anecdote illustrates this trait.

One day while sitting in his bedroom in the White House, where he had retired to write a message to congress, a card was brought in by a servant. An officer on duty at the time, seeing that the president did not want to be disturbed, remarked to the servant, 'Say the president is not in." General Grant overheard the remark.

THE REAL DANGER.

The American who has craveled about his country sufficiently to efface the bias of provincialism must have observed the spirit of broad democracy which pervades all classes and all conditions of people in all sections and all localities. It is a distinctive American feature. It seems to be indigenous to the soil. It is at once the wonder and the admiration of observers from other lands. Notwithstanding the phenomenal growth of population and the chaotic condition existing in many communities as an incident of rapid settlement, this feature of American life is constantly becoming stronger and is leading to a higher plane of citizenship. In spite of the pessimistic forebodings of a certain school of reformers, the American people as a whole are better fitted by education, by association, by habit and by inclination, for the duties of citizenship than ever before. The evolution of our political life has been one of progress, and the advance during this century has been almost immeasurable. To those who believe in the people this is a pleasant reflection. But on the other hand we must observe that the tendency of recent legislation has not been in the direction of a broader democracy, of a wider exercise by the people of the functions of popular government. The later changes in full city ticket to be voted for at organic law have also been in the contrary direction. In the midst of this tide of reform which is pressing the limits of constitutional government on all sides, the thoughtful citizen may well stop to inquire where this clamor and clashing of factions, this craze for reform at any cost, is leading. Are we sailing within safe constitutional limits? May we not be drifting dangerously close to shoals over which a free people cannot pass in safety?

enough, the evils against which those which threaten the personal citizen. Excessive taxation, extravwithout infringing upon the prerogatives of the people. The history of local government in this country people and the governing body secures the better administration.

The real danger to American institution lies in the tendency of most reformers to subvert the fundamental principles of liberty, to narrow the functions of popular government and disregard the rights of the minority, for the purpose of effecting the reform of temporary evils.

Reform which is effected at such a cost is dearly bought. The constitutions, state and federal, should stand between the individual rights and personal liberties of citizens and the despotism of unbridled majorities as Magna Charta and the Bill of Rights stand between the British subject and kingly prerogatives. Jefferson believed that government was most enduring, had the strongest hold upon the hearts of the people and could command greater sacrifices upon the altar of patriotism, which came in contact with the private concern, the social and commercial life of the people at corded, most completely the direction of local affairs to the people. Therein lies the true strength of democracy. But, since Jefferson's time, we have had a quarter of a century of paternal government. has been invaded. The material nothing. welfare of a portion of the people has been made a charge upon the Centralization and class rule have been dominant. The legitimate result of this departure from early traditions has been a school of thinkers and agitators whose "isms" range all the way from populism and other mild forms of lunacy to avowed socialism. One has but to glance over the dispatches from the various state capitals, this winter, to see whole sessions of state legislatures given over to private billsto legislation for this or that interest. Such reforms as have been effected, and the majority of those demanded, have been on lines calculated to curb and control the popular will

It is in this direction that the real dangers of American institutions lie. Every restriction upon personal liberty is a step backwards. Every function removed from popular control is an additional menace to popular government. Nothing will undermine our political fabric so quickly nor so surely as a disregard of the rights of the individual. Within certain prescribed limits the majority must rule, but, when that majority in the arrogance of its strength oversteps those limits to the disparagement of the minority, its rule becomes despotism, and the despotism of a majority may become as onerous, as galling, and breed the same sentiment towards constituted authority as the despotism of a czar.

The future progress and prosperity of America lies not in the restriction but in the extension of popular rights and popular privileges.

AN OLD PRUSSIAN DISH.

"Beerfish" Is Alleged to Be Good When It Is Served Steaming Hot.

There is a dish dear to every Prus sian's heart, which may be, however, absolutely new in this country. All Germans may not know it, as it is not made in south Germany except in isolated cases. Beer is not its chief ingrethe makeup.

The dish is known as beerfish, and the German carp, praised of epicures, is herein freated in a manner worthy of the fish. It must be made with half beer, or, in the absence of this, with weiss beer and porter. The fish is cut, not in half, like a shad, but in sections or squares. Three or four cuts across the fish are all that is necessary. Of course the fish must be cleaned

A large glazed pot is used. A layer of large onions is placed on the bottom of the pot. On this are sprinkled various spices; then a layer of a substance called fish pfefferkuchen, which has more or less fish substance in it and can be procured at any German grocery or delicatessen store; then a layer of sliced lemon; then carp. This is repeated until the pot is full.

A layer of onions is placed on top and beer is poured into the whole mass until all the interstices are filled. It is cooked for 20 minutes over a slow fire, meantime adding a spoonful of vinegar and another of sugar. Beerfish is delicious when it is cooked and served steaming hot. But its good qualities do not end here, for after it is cold it offers allurements which make it hard to decide which way it tastes better, hot or cold. -Philadelphia Times.

Diplomatic Complications Very Tangled Just at Present.

SECRETARY GRESHAM'S BUSY TIME

With Troubles in Central American, Cuba and Hawaii to Solve the State Department Talent Has a Steady Job_The Case from a Spanish Editor.

WASHINGTON, March 21.—The Central American, complications, the Mexico-Guatemala difficulty and the Spanish insult to Old Glory are the reigning sensations of the day, to which is added the break between Gresham and the Hawaiian minister. Between them all it would seem that our diplomatic talent in the state department would find "foemen worthy of its steel," or something to that effect. The alleged British demand on suspicion that the telegram from Managua had its origin in the United States, and that John Bull has not made any such peremptory demand. That is the belief expressed by a good many of the diplomats.

Looks Like War in Mexico. It begins to look as though it will be impossible to avert war between Mexico and Guatemala. Opinion is freely expressed in diplomatic circles here that serious trouble is almost certain to result. Senor Romero, the Mexican minister, expresses a lively hope that the points in dispute may be settled, and so do the diplomats from Guatemala, but this hope is not generally entertained. A war between as having been dismantled and sunk by those two countries can have only one the Infanta Isabella, is still shrouded in termination. It will end in the extension | mystery. It is stated, however, that the of the boundaries of Mexico farther south, the subjugation of the strongest Central American country, and its elimination from the map of independent nations. It has long been the dream of Mexico to acquire Central America, and she seems to be in the way of a realization of the na-tional desire. The war spirit is said to have again burst out in Mexico with increased fury.

Question Between the Countries. According to Mexican Minister Romero: "The pending question between Mexico and Guatemala is a very plain one. Each country claims that under the de facto line existing before the treaty of 1882 she was in possession of the disputed territory, and both agree that it belongs to Mexico under the line marked by the treaty. As the treaty line is paramount Mexico considered the action of Guatemala in sending an armed force to destroy the log camps established there by Mexicans who were cutting wood under grants of the Mexican government, seize the logs and arrest the men, an unwarranted invasion of her territory and has asked Guatemala to apologize for it, and to pay an indemnity to the victims of the outrage."

The Case of Thurston of Hawaii. And now we come to the Hawaiian mat-There is no doubt that Thurston's recall has been asked-and that long enough ago to have received a reply—because, as alleged, Thurston told the reporters something before he gave the information to the state department. This is variously declared to be always wrong, and wrong only according to what he told. Senator Hale has been among the most zealous defenders of the Hawaiian republic on the floors of the senate, but he does not support Thurston in the matter of the minister's reported recall at the instance of Secretary Gresham on the facts so far as developed. If Thurston tion. If taxation were ever sought to be published diplomatic correspondence be fore giving it to the state department, says Hale, he was clearly in the wrong.

He, Likes the Dole Republic. relations with the Dole government, for I such in fact as well as in name-not like of subsistence. This is the general doctrine ing Mexico, which are nothing but military despotisms," It really makes little difference whether Thurston has violated official etiquette or not, if he is persona non grata he must go. He must also go whether the Dole government likes it or not. But if it doesn't like it Dole will simply omit to accredit another person to succeed Thurston and in this case Willis, our minister to Hawaii, will be obliged to take a leave of absence just as Porter, our minister to Italy, did when Baron Fava was recalled as the result of the killing of his fellow countrymen in New Orleans. AS TO THE CASE OF CUBA.

A Little Patriotic Blow from a Havana Eminent and Loyal Editor. Cuba is a sweet morsel to a good many American statesmen, who would like to find some plan to raise the American flag over the island. Probably there is more agreement on this point among Americans than on any other in which the question is acquisition of new territory. But there is loyalty to Spain in Cuba, and no disinclination to boast a little of Spanish valor on the sea and land. La Union Constitutional, a semi-official paper printed at Havana, justifies the firing on the Allianca on the ground that she ran away. The article then recites the achieve ments of the Spanish navy, and proceeds:

'Let it be known, then, that our navy Michigan F. & M., Detroit 287,608.00 of today is the same as that of Lepanto, Trafalgar and Callao. It is the same that the Austrian admiral, Tegsthoff, pointed out to his officers to be imitated before are of the same race and blood as those who fought and fell before San Sebastain on the ships that were unprotected; the same who, at Pugalugalon and Melilla, punished the Moors of Mendadan and Riff for their insults; the same that on board the Sachez Baraosta, in the Alcede and the Santa Maria defied and conquered the tempests of the ocean, and the same that during the late naval review Missouri here has gone out. The water eceived universal admiration. "Finally, they are the same men that on sea and land are unconquerable. It would be well that the United States should bear this in mind, so that the prestige of that nation may not suffer in the contentions that may arise through adventurers and traitors who make war on Spain and her noble sons; and let that nation remember that the laws of neutrality were made for nations that know how to respect them. But talk like this does not sink ships

THEIR HANDS FULL out the aid of powder and ball. He said: "It looks as if Spain would make the required apology, and if so, all will soon be settled. I had hoped it would be other-wise and that Spain would assume such a belligerent tone that it would be necessary for the United States to go over and take possession of Cuba. We certainly ought to have that island in order to round up our possessions as they should be, and if we cannot buy it I for one should like to have an opportunity to acquire it by conquest."

The real cause of the uprising in Cuba of Thurston as Viewed from Different lies in the terrific and wholly unjust tax-Points—Romero on the Contention Beation imposed upon the people. Spain is tween Mexico and Guatemala—Blast very poor and Cuba's natural resources are large. Consequently Cuba is made to suffer that Spain may thrive. The total taxation that falls upon the population of 1,600,000 is something like $39,000,000 a year. Of this $28,000,000 is a state tax and $11,000,000 a municipal tax for the support of the officials, the soldiers and the police who are in Cuba to oppress the taxpayers. There is a tax upon everything that an unholy mental activity could invent. Take it in Cienfuegos, for instance. Through taxation alone flour is $12 a barrel when it reaches the consumer.

For projecting signs in front of places Nicaragua, has fallen somewhat into the of business the Spanish government background, because there is a shrewd charges at the rate of 5 cents a letter. It costs a guest $1.25 to be allowed to take his departure from any hotel. Liquor is taxed so highly that the profits, high as they are, are almost eaten up. The most peculiar thing in the present situation is relative to the taxation upon slaughtered cattle. The government charges so much per stab for the killing to begin with. Then they place a tax on the hide, on the horns, on each of the four hoofs and finally on the tail.

FATE OF THE SCHOONER IRENE.

It Is Still an Unsolved Problem, But She

Was a Suspicious Cratt. TAMPA, Fla., March 21.—The fate of the schooner Irene, which was reported Irene had for some time been under suspicion, and that the officials of the United States and Spain have been watching her. The last heard of her she was in the vicinity of Boca Grande.

Mrs. Clara Acosta has arrived from Matanza, Cuba. She reports that the civil guard and about eighty Cuban citizens met in conflict there on the night of the 13th inst., and that the latter were forced to beat a hasty retreat. One Cuban was wounded. It is rumored there that the blacks are are conspiring to rise against the whites. Cubans claim that this rein the hope of dividing the Cuban forces.

JOE CHAMBERLAIN ON TAXATION.

Some General Observations on a Subject of Universal Interest.

NEW YORK, March 21.-Hon. Joseph Chamberlain was recently quoted as saying in a speech delivered in London: "You may try as hard as you like to take the taxes off the poor and put them on the rich; you may try all these schemes of betterment taxes and taxes on ground rents; you may try till you are black in the face, but in the long run all these taxes will be shifted by the rich on to the poor." In reply to a letter sent to Chamberlain by Bolton Hall, vice president of the New York Tax Reform association, asking if the speech had been correctly quoted, the following letter has been re ceived, authorized by Chambarlain, and dated London, March 9, 1895:

"SIR:-I am directed by Mr. Chamberlain to say that he thinks the report to which you refer is a little too broad and Mr. Chamberlain should have said that taxation falls most heavily upon the poor. This is not so much a question of economic law as of general observaplaced entirely, or even unfairly, upon the rich, they will find, as they have done in the past, means of evading it. Capital "I had hoped," he continued, "that place, and it will go where there is the nothing more would happen to strain our greatest security. Meanwhile the poor are deprived of employment, and while believe it is a good government, and that the rich may suffer loss and diminution the Hawaiians have a republic which is of income, the poor will lose their means these Central American republics, includ- which Mr. Chamberlain desired to impress on his hearers, and he had no intention of entering upon the question of first incidence of any particular tax.'

Strikers Have Hopes of Ripley.

PITTSBURG, March 21.—Ralph Baggaley, president of the United States Glass company, has resigned, and D. C. Ripley, formerly president of the company, has been elected to the position. The United States Glass company has a complete monopoly of the flint glass trade. For the past eighteen months the flint glass workers union has been on a strike against the company for recognition and the union scale. The strikers believe that the new administration will adopt a more liberal policy with the workmen and that the strike will be terminated soon.

TWO COMEDIANS.

That evening Bloncourt, the son, was to make his first appearance on the stage in "Chatterton." The piece which, though not forgotten, had dropped out of sight and for some years had filled a narrower sphere in the quiet appreciation of home reading, now excited, on its first night, almost the interest that a great novelty might. Those who were familiar with it without having seen it played were curious to assist at its interpretation-a process in which certain beauties of a work, especially the most subtle points, disappear, are scattered, volatilized, as one may say, in the heat of the footlights, while oth ers burst unexpectedly into view through the medium of voice and gesture.

Those who had been present at former performances of the piece were happy to bring back again two hours of their youth and to glow once more with the warmth of their first artistic emotion. In a word, the old play, reappearing as it did in the midst of the commonplace trivialities of the day, rejuvenated the whole audience and aroused it to enthusiasm.

It must be admitted that it would be impossible to conceive of a more perfect Chatterton than young Bloncourt made. Son and grandson of comedians, the youth had the blood of a true artist in his yeins, and he was evidently bent on proving it to us that evening.

In the tumult and excitement of the applause, in the midst of the hundreds of pairs of eyes and hands that were exclusively concerning themselves with the stage, I caught a glimpse from time to time of a handsome face which lookport is being circulated by the Spaniards | ed out, pale and set, from the darkness at the back of the house. It was Blon- the pattering of hailstones, that reached court, the father, who had come to be us from the auditorium and was intenpresent at the triumph of his son. Evidently deeply moved, he frequently changed his place and appeared in all the different parts of the theater, sometimes in the midst of the brilliant dis play in the boxes and at other moments was almost lost in the crowded galler ies. It was as though he wished to measure on every side this splendid success, in which he also had a share. The audience recognized him and pointed him out to each other. "Look at Papa Bloncourt. Isn't he happy tonight, though!" And some of them while applauding turned in his direction, as though to include the great artist in the triumph of his child and pupil.

It is a fact that no fame is so short lived as that of a comedian. Once he drops out of the public gaze it is all over with him. No one gives him a further thought. His is the fate of the spoken word, which, however beauti ful, is carried off in air; of the musical chord that vanishes as soon as the notes are struck. But in this case, thanks to his son, Bloncourt could escape the terrible destiny that awaits comedians. He was welcoming a new glory which was rising at the fading of his own and would merge his artistic career in another full of hope and promise. So the poor man's emotion was deep and strong. I could see that his lips occasionally trembled, and his limbs twitched with nervousness. Between each act he roamed about in the lobbies, drawing near the different groups to overhear what was being said, and when hand clasps and felicitations were pressed upon him he blushed and shrank away with the awkwardness and embarrassment of a diffident youth.

Passing close by him at one of these moments, I could not restrain the sympathetic impulse which drew me toward this deep, silent joy. "You ought to be a very happy man," I said, shaking his "It's an immense success."

The hand I took in mine was cold and moist, and it drew itself sharply, almost angrily, away. Its possessor smiled grimly as he looked at me. 'So you compliment, too, do you?

Isn't there a single soul to understand what I am suffering? Ah, come. I am suffocating. Let us get out of here.' And he dragged me with him out into the street. An icy wind was whistling round the corners, but the old comedian did not appear to notice its rigor. "Ah, that is good, good!" he exclaimed, drinking in the cold air with delight. "I thought I should go crazy inside there. For two hours I have endured their applauding and their stupid congratulations, which are a mockery to me. You are astonished that I say this to you? Well, it is so. I am jealous. I am jealous of my own childfairly green with envy of him. That is a frightful thing to say, isn't it? But why did he take my part away from me? It was mine. I was to have played it. It is exactly in my line, and Vigny himself promised it to me. A week before he died he said to me, 'Bloncourt, when they put on "Chatterton" again, I count on you to play it,' and I was waiting with such impatience for them to bring it out. Paris was beginning to forget me in the long period I had been inactive, and I hoped this creation would confer a second youth upon mea renewal of past successes. I studied hard night and day. Finally I was "One morning the boy comes running to me and throws his arms around my neck: 'Oh, father, how happy I am! I am going to play Chatterton.' He knew as well as any one the promise that had been made me, but in his joy he had forgotten it. Children are so selfish in gets for boarding me. - Detroit Free their happiness! This one dealt me the Press.

tlow with a laugh. He told me they had first thought of me for the part, but I was too mature, too marked-ah, there is enough in such a disappointment as that to mark one indeed! I am sure that in five minutes 20 years passed over my head. If the boy had uttered a word of regret or of tenderness, I should simply have said to him: 'Do not play that part. You will kill me, ' and I am sure he would not, because, with it all, the child loves me. But pride held  $m \epsilon$ back We talked of the part. He asked my advice about it. It had been lying on my table for two months So now we read it together. I gave him my conception of how it ought to be played. From time to time he would break completely away from me and study a line out for himself, and with a surety of insight into the tastes of the publi that I no longer possess he would find a point to be made where I saw none at all Positively one would have to undergo it himself to know what I suffered during that interview, but it was all as nothing to the martyrdom I have endured this evening.

"Oh, I ought not to have come, but I could not stay away. I was irresistibly drawn by curiosity and perhaps-I am ashamed to say it-by the secret hope of surprising among the bravos a regret. a remembrance for me, of hearing some one in the audience say, 'Oh, if the elder Bloncourt were playing that!' But no I have heard nothing, not a word They have had all they could do to applaud. But really the boy does not act well. He is actually bad. I certainly thought they were going to hiss when he came on. He can't even walk well. He has no idea of stage deportment. In all that great, thoughtful, complex part has he made a single original effect! No. He has simply thrown himself headlong into it, with all the heedless 70 S. MAIN ST. ness of youth. From the point of view of the science of acting it all struck me as be ing very profound, very just, and I was surprised to find so many false notes in the harmonious whole that had so pleas ed me, all of which did not alter the fact that we were interrupted every few moments by the sound of applause, like sified in sonority by the quiet, empty "Go on-applaud!" said the unhappy comedian, turning pale at each burst 'Applaud He is young. To be young, that is everything. I amold. My age is written on my face. Ah, how stupid it all is!" Then in a low voice, as if talk ing with himself: "What I feel is almost incomprehensible. Here is a boy who has stolen everything away from me-my name and my glory, who has not even waited for me to die to ster into my shoes-and in spite of it I cannot help loving him. He is my son, after all. I have nourished him, cared for him, taught him, and when I hear them applaud him I feel a movement of gratified pride in spite of myself. There are some clever touches in the young scamp's work. The mistake was teaching him my own calling. I should have diverted his talents in some other direction. Then I could have been proud of him to my heart's content. I should not have had the grief of seeing my 3 years' successes wiped out by his first day of triumph.'

At this moment the crowd commenced to pour out of the theater. A mur mur of approbation, an atmosphere of success passed from group to group and by way of the silent streets was going to communicate itself throughout al Paris. The old comedian was leaning against a pillar, his ear strained to catch the commentaries of the last straggling spectators. All at once he gave a spring. "Goodby," he called out to me hurriedly. I tried to hold him back. "Bloncourt, Bloncourt, where are you going?" He turned his face toward me, his eyes glistening with tears. "Where am I going? To hug the boy, parbleu!".- From the French of Al phonse Daudet in Short Stories.

Gravels of the Glacial Age.

Some 10,000 or more years ago the conditions which had brought about the great ice age were beginning to change The elevated land began to sink, and a higher temperature slowly followed. The long winter was gradually drawing to a close, and the great springtime of the world was beginning to hasten its influence upon an ice covered land. Tons, rather mountains, of ice began to melt, and the water filled the river valleys to overflowing. Gravel, sand and mud were borne along by these raging waters and deposited wherever the conditions were favorable. Ice rafts covered the surface of the flood, bearing rocks and bowlders from more northern lands.

All rivers which had glacial sources were greatly influenced by the final melting. As the southern part of the ice sheet rested over northern Pennsylvania. the Delaware and the Susquehanna were typical rivers of the age. The rocks and gravels which line their banks show how well they have kept the record. In the Delaware valley brick clay and gravel are laid out in beautiful terraces, especially at Stroudsburg and the Water Gap. Here the waters rose some 200 feet, and an artificial dam is supposed to have formed the river into a broad lake. The Indians, it is said. have a curious legend about this flood. They tell us that the "Minsies" were the first race which dwelt here, and the region round about they call "Minisink," meaning that the "waters are gone'''—a vague remembrance perhaps of the postglacial floods.—Lippincott's.

A TRUTH SEEKER.

He was a seeker after truth, and as he shivered up the snowy stairway in which the wind was blowing blindly there was a look of worried anxiety in his face. He knocked at the door of the slate writing medium, and after waitang for a mement in an anteroom was ushered into the "presence."

'I desire," said the seeker after truth, "to speak with Philip Augustus of France, or Frederick Barbarossa of Germany, or Richard of the Lion Heart. They are now in the spirit world and have been for 700 years, more or less. I can't just recall their numbers.

The medium went through the usual form required by the spirits in such cases and said:

"I find that the gentlemen you want young man at Richard's instrument who says he would like to communicate with you.

"All right," said the seeker after truth, "maybe he will do. There is a little matter I want explained, and he can do it as well as anybody. What I want to know is how on earth the people got along in the days of sheet iron armor when the snow and the cold winds came.

Then there was a scratching on the slate, and the medium handed it over to the truth seeker. It read.

'Good! That's just what I want to tell you My name is Ichabod Potts. I lived on earth in the twelfth century. and was with Richard the Lion Hearted and Frederick Barbarossa and Philip Augustus in the crusade that lasted from 1189 to 1192, and I'm the man you want to see. There's a lot about that crusade that history has botched up. In the first place, we called Richard Our Dick, and Frederick, Reddy, and Philip -oh, we called him several uncomplimentary things. Do you want the story? Let me know at once how many words.

'Let her go,' said the truth seeker as he looked over the slate and arranged with the medium for the use of the line all day

"Well," began the slate, "as I said, 1 am Ichabod Potts, yeoman. I left London in 1188, or such a matter, to go to Jerusalem with Our Dick. The boys always called him that just before a war. Several thousand of us pulled out and marched across country in the fall and got down into southern France for the winter, and by good luck got through that winter without misfortune. Then we fiddled around France and Italy and Germany, drumming up a crowd, when the fall of 1189 found us over in Austria, with a lot of Dagos. Dick got gay one day and ordered a lot of the Eyetalian armor—a job lot, with automatic clasps and a lot of duplex levers and swivels that he was mighty proud of. He kept us drilling in those old base burners all fall, and Reddy-him they call Frederick Barbarossa in the booklooked on mighty jealous, for his men only had one dog chain armor that didn't clank nor glitter, nor nothing. Its only advantage was it was comfortable. Well, to make a long story of magazine length, the winter of 1189 came on-you remember of course the cold winter-but of course you don't. Well, it was fearfully cold—rained all December and took the stove polish off them armors and rusted 'em up some. And then on the 8th of January there was the worst blizzard on the 25 years' record of the University of Vienna. The hinges of them automatics were wet and rusty, and, by Johnnie, when we got up the morning of the 9th, we had to thaw em out to get 'em on. It kept getting colder and colder, and at 10 o'clock Thursday morning it began to snow Say, but it did blow and snow! Dick, he had some tin ear muffs and didn't care a cent for the cold, so he or-

"It was awful. The snow drifted into the crevices of their breastplates and leg guards and iron shoes till every man was a walking snow blockade. But Dick wanted to make the Dutch dog chain armor look sick, wanted to show Reddy that his job lot of armor was good for all kinds of weather, sort of general purpose armor, and he put us through the Knights Templars' drill, and the fire drill, and the K. of P., and the Sicilian circle, and the 'cheat or swing,' and the 'ring around the rosy, and all the rest of it. But I saw old Reddy, who was looking on, wink the other eye, and one of his head men rode off to our camp. I say I noticed this at the time, but I didn't think of it until dered the boys out for dress parade.

"Well, the rime frost was a-gathering on their breastplates and arm covers and sheet iron helmets and hauberks of our'n an inch deep, and the thermometer was getting down deeper and deeper in the tube. When we broke ranks and went back, you could see the steam come up from under them iron breastplates and through the bars in our visors like the steam comes out of the Sanhole of a sewer on a cold morning. .t was awful. The snow had drifted through the slashes in our boots, and we had to empty 'em out before the track was open. The slate was read and erased, and the pencil began again:

"I was pulling through an extra deep cut going back to camp when I spies a lady who had on one of the new high hats they were wearing that winter. Old Dick, he was going on ahead of me, and I saw him bracing up to make quirer.

a killing He felt burriedly all over his armor to see that it wasn't wrinkled nor unbuckled any place-he was such a skeezicks among the women that way -and as she went by he flipped his hand up to his iron helmet that was covered with an inch of frost, and as he started to salute her the hand didn't come. Froze fast! And the lady, she hums as she passes, 'Where Did You Get That Hat?' I thought the Lion Heart would just burst his breastplate, he was that mad. But he pretended that was the way be always done, says 'the best people was all doing that way' -holding their fingers to their helmets after saluting a lady I didn't say nothing It wasn't my cue to come in. So I just helped the old man up the palace steps and pulled out to tell the boys."

A new slate was brought, and the narrative went on. "Well, sir, when I got there, what do yous'pose I found? Weather cold, mind you, way down = 20 degrees below and still a-dropping. I found that whole blamed army of English crusaders in their job lot base burner armor leaning up against one another, not able to budge. There they was, a-whooping and hollering for some one to come and take the base burners off'n 'em, but not moving an inch. They couldn't. They had perspired on the road and melted some of the snow, and that, with the rust of the night before, had froze tight as a rock. They couldn't move, or they'd fall over

"There they stood stacked up like a are all talking now, but there is a fire sale of old iron, and the snow drifting in and packing down harder in the cracks of the armor plate every minute. I was still in working order, so I sets out to find the blacksmith. When I found him, he was silly drunk, a-dropping the last monkey wrench on the whole European continent into a hole in the ice on the river, which he'd cut to see if the fish wouldn't bite. The goose grease, which we used to limber up the hinges of the army when they creaked, bad gone ahead of the monkey wrench. And there we was. Ten thousand men or so froze in the armor, and nothing to turn a nut or bolt nor to loosen a hinge, and the blacksmith so drunk he couldn't tell straight from horizontal.

At this the corner of the slate creaked to simulate a chuckle that Mr. Potts desired to make vocal. Then the story

"Wel!, I done all I could. I pulls out and tells old Dick, and also tells him that I thought old Reddy, the Dutch king, had did it by getting his head man to git the blacksmith full. We couldn't do nothing. Dick and I went out, and the minute we'd get a man away from the stack to thaw his hinges out he'd fall over. He couldn't walk, and when we got three or four off of the south side the wind blew the whole pile over. And there they was. A whole ship load of iron gone to waste, as you may say, on account of armor plate frauds. It was a shame. I told Dick so, but he didn't say nothing. He knowed where he could get plenty more men, and he found a ready sale for the iron in the spring. "But what worried him worst was to think how that redheaded Dutch king would give him the laugh at the wassail bout that night. From that on he had it in for Frederick, and so the crusade that had started out so fine and gay busted wide open in the summer of 1192 on account of the lack of confidence of the leaders. But it was all that trick of Reddy's in getting Dick's blacksmith full in the cold winter of 1189 that started the row. Dick always after that seemed to side with Philip, who was from the father.

The Dead of the Sea.

An inquisitive Frenchman has thought it worth while to ask what becomes of the bodies, after death, of the numberless fish and other living creatures that fill the sea. Of course they all die, sooner or later, and vet it is an occurrence so rare as to be practically unknown for anybody who lives beside or on the ocean to come across the "remains" of even a single victim of the fate that awaits all things mortal. In the profounder depths putrefaction cannot take place, so if a dead fish once reached those calm, chill abysses he would be preserved until the end of time. Probably, however, no such peaceful repose awaits more than an infinitesimally small proportion of the finny folk, and no great accumulation of lifeless bodies exists at the bottom of the sea. The living eat the dead before they can make the long, slow journey downward. As a matter of fact, extremely few fish, and perhaps none, ever meet what is known as a "natural death." Almost always they are slain and devoured, and so put definitely out of the way.

Railway Natural History In India. A correspondent of The Times, India, who vouches for thhe truth of the story, tells how a lady traveling beween Kurrachee and Multan with two tame squirrels was stopped at a station and told she must take a dog ticket for each squirrel, as squirrels were "dogs," and was further compelled to put them in the dog box. Railway natural history in India would seem from the above to differ from that taught on English railway lines, where, according to the famous classification, "cats is dogs, and rabbits is dogs, and parrots likewise, but this yer tortis is a insec', and there ain't no charge.'

DUPED BY A GIRL.

-George Cotterell in Good Words

Texas might truly be called the 'rogues' paradise' in 1850. "Horse dealers"-to give them their own chosen title-gamblers and counterfeiters, to say nothing of villains of still blacker grades, were predominant, and as a general thing ruled matters with a high hand.

Situated near the bank of one of the confluents of the river Brazos were several farms, whose owners had chosen to settle together, the better to defend defended. themselves and property.

Their most dreaded enemy and scourge of the country for miles around was a daring desperado known as Jack Wingrow

Jack and his companions built a large, heavy loghouse, almost against a high bank of clay and sandstone, a few miles distant from the first settlers.

But, when the house appeared completed, work still went on, night and day, the men working by relays.

And then, at the end of several months, the strangers threw off the mask and appeared in their true colors They helped themselves to such stock as they most fancied, and when one settler, James Agden, resisted, a pistol shot shattered his right arm and left him a cripple for life.

The outlaw band grew stronger and more bold as they encountered but little resistance

But Wingrow, king as he was among his men, had to succumb at last, and what armed force could not do the bright eyes and pretty face of a maiden

Mabel Craythorne was the only child of the richest stockgrower of the settlement. Her father had suffered severely by the marauding outlaws and was still suffering from a bad wound before he gave up in despair.

But one day Wingrow caught sight of Mabel, and he did not escape without injury.

Knowing that his life was safe while his men remained to avenge him, he boldly called at the house of old Cyrus Craythorne and made a proposal.

He offered to cease troubling the settlement and to protect them from other outlaws provided Mabel should become his wife. The indignant reply of the old man did not abash him in the least, and he took his departure, saying that he would expect their answer in one month's George Mablie was only a poor herds-man of her father's, but he was true hearted and brave. They learned to love each other, but as yet it was a secret

George mustered outlaw's threat and asked the hand of his employer's daughter.

As soon as his astonishment would permit Mr. Claythorne bade him be gone, adding that if he would break up the band of desperadoes he might then renew his proposal.

The young folks managed to meet, and out of their despair grew a settled

As a first move Mabel one day mounted her herse and rode down the creek. When once beyond sight of the house, her animal's head was turned toward the hill, where stood the outlaw strong-Approaching it, she rode more slowly and nerved herself for the trial. "Good mornin, miss," the outlaw bowed. "How's the family?"

"Quite well, thank you. Mr. Wingrow, I believe?"

'Yas; so you know me?" "I saw you at our house not long since. But I'm very thirsty. Can you tell me where I can get some water?" "Thar's some fresh in the shanty. I'll git it ef"-

"Oh, Mr. Wingrow, please let me go too! I've got such a curiosity to see what it is you keep so secret in there. Besides, I'm only a girl. I could not do you any harm if I would."

"I don't know. The men mightn't "You are master. Surely you do not care what they say? I don't believe you are afraid of what they think!" 'Jack Wingrow afraid! Not he! Let me help you to 'light.'' While he placed her a chair and hastened to fetch the water, Mabel took a survey of the room. Her eyes dwelt long upon the doorway where Wingrow had disappeared. This was apparently the entrance to an underground vault. Then, hearing the steps of the outlaw returning, Mabel hastily picked up a tasty morocco belt from the mantel,

"Oh, Mr. Wingrow, where did you get these? They're just what I've been wanting for so long! You must bring them over some time for father to buy for me-won't you?"

"Do you like 'em? Ef you do, they're yourn or anythin else I've got, "eagerly replied Jack, and then, as Mabel hesitated, he clumsily buckled them around her waist.

From step to step she led the outlaw on until he repeated his offer, and Ma- a new hat every four weeks."-London bel hesitated—so admirably that a far Tit-Bits.

more acute man than Wingrow would have been deceived. 'Well, I hardly know. Father has taken such a foolish dislike to you that I know he would not consent. I should dearly like such a life Why, it would be equal to being a queen."

Gracefully effecting her escape, she rode slowly homeward, with a sickening feeling of disgust, mingled with exultation.

Day after day passed on, and while ontwardly events pursued their usual course Mabel's plot was progressing rap-

Indeed it required all her skill and tact to keep Jack Wingrow in proper subjection.

But she was equal to the task, and once fairly started in the scheme she experienced a strange, wild pleasure in duping the infatuated outlaw.

George had taken his employer into their confidence and had selected several others whom he knew to be trustworthy, and upon whose aid he relied at the moment of action.

The outlaw chief had at length persuaded her, with great apparent difficulty, to consent to an elopement. According to their plans, Jack Win-grow was to appoint himself as guard upon that particular night. Only one man was needed, at any time, to act as such, for the cabin was so strongly built that an entrance could scarcely be effected by force even if un-

Mabel was to arrive about midnight and rap lightly upon the door, Wingrow would open, and then, mounting their steeds, they were to leave the cabin to care for itself until their flight was discovered.

The appointed night came at length, and all was ready.

Mabel and George, leading their five companions, fully armed and resolved to conquer at all risks, rode out from the settlement and proceeded toward the outlaw stronghold.

The men crept as close to the door as they dared to, crouching low down in the shade. Then Mabel advanced and gave the signal.

A low voice called her by name, and as she replied the door opened and Jack Wingrow emerged. "Hist, don't make no noise. The men are all asleep. Let me"- and he strove to embrace the maiden, who avoided him and stepped back. Like a hungry panther, George Mablie sprang forward. Without a struggle Wingrow was thrown down and hastily bound and gagged. Then the settlers noiselessly entered the cabin and lighted the lamps until all within was light as day.

The heavy slab door leading into the vault was partially closed and secured. Three men took their stations beside the entrance with clubbed rifles, while others stood with ready revolvers commanding the doorway.

Then George set up a loud cry of 'Fire!"

The desperadoes flocked to the entrance, and one after another fell like logs, while the young herder continued his cries.

A wagon was procured, and the prisoners were taken to the settlement, where the next day they were tried and condemned to death.

Mr. Craythorne was as good as his word, and a week after Mabel became the wife of-not the penniless herdsman, but the landed gentleman. - Boston Globe.

"Aladdin," "Ali Baba."

Some years ago M. Zotenberg completely vindicated the literary integrity of Galland, who was long believed to have himself invented a number of the tales in "Les Mille et Une Nuits," and deliberately foisted them on the public as genuine Arabian compositions. As those tales—"Aladdin," "Ali Baba,"

"Prince Ahmed," the "Envious Sisters," etc. - are among the most fascinating in the whole of that famous story book, this was certainly paying a very high compliment to the great orientalist's inventive genius, if it did impugn his honesty.

Some candid scholars there were, however, who strongly maintained that, though those narratives were not to be found in any Arabic text of "Elf Layla wa Layla," Galland must have taken them down from the recitals of professional story tellers in the Levant.

But the question was finally settled when M. Zotenberg discovered them in a manuscript copy of "The Nights," which had been recently acquired for the national library at Paris, and published the Arabic text of the tale of Aladdin and his lamp, together with a monograph on the authenticity of the tales which had been hitherto commonly regarded as spurious.-Notes and

"Perhaps I may be able to send you containing a brace of richly mounted its certificate of baptism soon," answered the inspector, which he did in the form of a summons, which subsequently was transformed into a fine of £5 for adding 15 per cent of water.—London Telegraph.

FOR ALL.

In the window a stately calla grew.

And its bloom was good to see.

So many there were to praise the flower,
And the sun was so kind at the morning hour.

That calla was proud of her little power,

The sun was made for me.

But the primrose hung her crimson head In the shade of the lily tall, And she said, "If I do my best, maybe The home ones will have delight in me." But a sunbeam out on a frolic free Peeped in the window, and with grace Gave a kiss to the blushing face.

And he said,
"Sweetheart, we shine for all."

THE LIE TONY TOLD.

I had known Jacques de Keroualles at Fontainebleau years before the war, and when he was brought into my little field hospital amid the luxuriant vineyards of Marly-sur-Seine, only a few miles from the edge of the great forest, he recognized me at once. It was early morning. Indeed the dawn had scarce come, and the river below us was pearly gray in the growing light, as rivers are before suurise.

"L'Anglais," he cried joyously, for De Keroualles was a merry soul. He raised his blood stained hand in a little gay salute. I make no doubt he had fought bravely and in a manner worthy of the old blood in his veins. He was wet through and covered with dirt. The battle had taken place on the previous afternoon, and the wounded were consequently allowed to lie out on the fields the whole night. "Le petit jeune homme," he added, "we meet again."

Then he fainted, with the smile on his lips. It is only in books that men die different from what they have lived. It did not take me long to look at this gay youth's wound, cutting away his English made linen, slicing the cloth of his rough uniform of a private soldier of the Army of the Seine-a mere band of volunteers despite their grand name. I knew a semmariste in it-not yet ordained a priest-who fought bravely through it, although he lacked the strength to hold his rifle straight without a support.

I saw at once that the career of Jacques de Keroualles was nearly over. Suddenly it all came back to me-Fontainebleau and the happy, careless, reckless life in the old town where the very paving stones are saturated with history and worn by the tread of those that made it. Jacques de Keronalles; Tony, vicomte de Muy: Raoul de Kolles, and half a dozen others-harum scarum fellows who made life one long laugh.

How often had we shouted the one line chorus in the Rue de France as the slow morning crept up the sky behind the palace!

I rose from the wounded man's side and went out to the veranda of the villa; converted into a temporary field hospital. A cavalry officer in the gay blue uniform of his immortal regiment, with a short, fur trimmed cape thrown carelessly back from the shoulder, stood moodily looking down over the vineyards. He turned at the sound of my footsteps and shook hands gravely. I looked hard at him. It was Tony de Mny-a grizzled, hard faced soldier.
"Well?" he asked. He looked into

"You need say nothing. I see from your face." my face sharply and made a grimace.

He threw away a half burnt cigarette and resumed his attitude of gloomy reflectiveness. I had known him a young. man a few years earlier, and glancing middle aged as that.

"The devil take all women!" he suddenly exclaimed with his absurd French vivacity and stamped his spurred heel on the tessellated pavement. "The devil take all women, mon ami."

"He will have as many as he can manage," I suggested, for I was young in those days, and the little wound I still carry had a smart in it yet. "You remember my sister?" Tony said curtly, and I nodded. We had all been in love with Mlle. de Muy, and she had managed in some way to keep us all in hand at once. She was fresh from a convent, where, it seems, these little arts must be acquired. The 'botte' that gave me my own hurt was, by the way, learned there. So far as Jacques de Keroualles had been concerned, however, we had always known that it was a serious matter.

"Before the war," Tony de Muy went on, "they were engaged. Then Jacques joined the army. What else could be do? As for me, I had always been in it, as you know. It is for our country, and Jacques was among the first. It is for our poor France that some of us fight for these Napoleons."

He turned and looked into the dim room where the cots were ranged in ranks-head and foot-the length of the

"He thinks that she has kept her word," he said, and I wondered how a few years' service could have hardened him.

"And?"

"And she is fiancee to some Italian count-some scum of Rome-who doubtless wears high heeled boots and paints his face, as I have seen them." In his heat he spoke too loudly, and Jacques de Keronalles, lying in that quiet room, recognized the voice, though he could not possibly have distinguished the words.

"Is that thou, Tony?" called out the cheery voice from within. It was impossible to realize that these were the tones of a dving man. I have seen two die laughing, both Frenchmen.

"Yes," answered the man by my

We entered the room together. Keroualles smiled when he saw us side by side, Tony de Muy towering above me.

"Ah," he cried, "it is like old times!"

I made shift to smile, but the white look was already about his lips. I wished that I could get away. "See you, Tony," he said, with a sudden change to gravity which had al ways been characteristic of him. Enghish people, and there are always a few living at Fontainebleau, thought De Keroualles very French. "See you, the good God wants me. What will you? We must be satisfied."

Tony held his lip with his teeth and made no answer. "If I could have seen Renee," murmured the dying man, with a wistful look at me. In books men invariably seem to die satisfied. In my experience they have always wanted something I could not give them.

"The young man looks grave," he "Ah, yes, I know We were to have been married, mon ami; that is

Then he lay still for a minute or so. "I wonder if she loves me," he said in a weaker voice, with a calm assurance characteristic of his nation, which has no awkwardness where we are self conscious and shy.

Rence's brother steadily.

And the dying man's eyes lighted. If I could tell all that I have seen compassed by a woman's love behind her back, I should be disbelieved. The best stories are rarely told.

"At last!" whispered De Keroualles. "At last," was the unflinching reply. "Tell me," went on the dying man. Did she say so?"

Yes.

'What did she say?" The Vicomte de Muy looked in my face and breathed heavily. As for me, I looked out of the window.

"Did she say she would be content to marry me?"

"Yes, quite content." "And more—beyond, I mean? All of it? I am the last of the De Keroualles.

And I heard the first catch in his

'She wanted that also?" 'Yes, she wanted that also."

There was a silence. The sun was now rising behind the pine trees on the other bank of the river. Its golden light showed that on the face of Jacques de Keroualles which had not hitherto been noticeable. He was dying of an internal bleeding which art was powerless to stop.

He looked at me.

"So, young man," he said with his wonderful gayety, "you see life has been worth the living, after all. To have won that, although it is so soon lost.

Teny de Muy was looking at me goross the cot with an expression which reminded me of my first operation.

Jacques de Keroualles did not speak again, and the smile slowly chilled, as it were, on his waxen features. De Muy failed for some time to realize that his friend was dead. Then he suddenly perceived it, and his grim face relaxed.

"God forgive me," be muttered, and pressing my hand he strode out of the room. His horse was waiting, and I heard him clatter away to the front, where the fighting had begun again. -Henry Seton Merriman in National Ob-

Ticket of Leave Men.

The ticket of leave is, in most instances, only a means to compel the unfortunate ex-prisoner to give facilities to the police to throw obstacles in the way of obtaining honest employment. These obstacles may not be intentionally created by the police. In some cases at him wondered whether I looked as the reporting of the ex-convict may enable those whose duty it is to keep an eye upon his movements to prevent a hopeless thief from palming himself off for purposes of theft upon some unsuspecting employer.

In a very large number of cases, however, it means that men who have been in a convict prison only once, and who may have found their way there owing to untoward circumstances, intemperance or temptation, and not through calculated crime, are prevented by this police surveillance from obtaining fair play in their endeavor to throw off all trace and suspicion of their past crime and prison experience. Where the 'ticket' penalty saves one employer from the risk of harboring an old jailbird in the guise of an honest worker, it prevents 20 men who may be honestly bent upon better ways from obtaining the employment which would make them independent of criminal practices. -Michael Davitt in Nineteenth Cen-

Remarkable Eyes.

Emma Byers, a remarkable freak of nature known as "the girl with a doll baby in her eye" was born at Fairmount, near Cincinnati, in February, 1882 The writer last saw her in May, 1888, when her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Michael Byers, lived at Budd and Harriet streets, Cincinnati. The eyes of the child, Emma, so far as is known to the contrary, are, or were, the most remarkable organs of vision which nature ever set in the head of a human being. In her left optic was the form of a perfect doll baby, handsomely dressed, and with features positively beautiful.

This wonderful freak was not a discoloration of the iris, or anything of that nature, but was to be seen in the form of the pupil itself. The pupil of the right eye was also of the freakish order, being in the exact shape of a crescent—resembling pictures of the moon at about the time of its first quarter. The image was not small or indistinct, but could be plainly observed at a distance of 8 or 10 feet. When she was first born her parents believed the child to be blind, but subsequent events proved her to be a child with remarkable range and clearness of vision. -St. Louis Republic.

COMMITTEE ON CITY BUILDINGS.

To the Honorable Common Council:
Your Special Committee appointed to investigate the matter of a location for city and ward buildings in the first and second wards.
would respectfully report that they have had the matter. the matter under investigation and submit he following:

the following:
Sub-committees were appointed to look up suitable sites and the prices for which they could be obtained in each of the wards named.
A number of localions were found well adapted to the uses of the city and the prices learned for which they could be obtained, and the same were reported to the full committee.

From the reports of these sub-committees it is the opinion of your committee that at the present time there are accessible to the city certain very deshable pieces of property that can be obtained at reasonable prices, which if they are not now secured may soon pass into other uses and out of the reach of the city entirely. We feel that the city now serjously needs to own its own office building, and that in the near future that need will bimperative. It is therefore deemed by your committee that the present time is exceptionally propitious for the city to secure a suitable location at a fair price.

We therefore recommend to your honorable body that the Common Council ask the citizens of Ann Arbor to raise by special tax the sum of $5.000, to purchase locations for buildings in the above wards. Your committee further recommend that when buildings are built upon such sites (if the tax shall carry) that they be built of brick.
