The Senior Reception.

The senior reception was a glittering success. Waterman's gymnasium had been handsomely decorated and lighted and the arrangements were so perfect that everything passed off without a hitch to mar the serenity of the occasion. About 250 couples occupied the floors and danced to the music furnished by Schremser's orchestra and the Chequamegons. The patronesses of the occasion were Mesdames Angell, Adams, D'Ooge, DePont, Herdman, Vaughan, Freer, Campbell and Dock. The booths around the hall were divided into sections for the better seating of the participants and ease in finding partners. and the refreshments were served on the ulty. second floor in better style than at any previous reception. The committees of are deserving of the highest praise.

The Commencement Address.

Five college presidents were on the platform at University hall yesterday, Gov. Rich who enjoys the unenviable distinction of having proven himself anything but a friend to the University. The address was delivered by James H. Canfield, recently president of the Nebraska State University and the newly elected president of Ohio State University. President Canfield's address is thus summarized by Correspondent Britten of the Evening News:

Curiously enough, his subject, like that of Mr. Angell's baccalaureate sermon Sunday night, related to individuality. His treatment of the topic, how thought likely to run counter to ideas ever, differed widely from that of Mr. taught in particular institutions. This Angell, for, whereas the university president's effort showed how the complex relations of modern society tend to destroy individuality, Mr. Canfield's address attempted to show the growth in individuality and the relative importance of the indiivdual from the time of the despotism of the past, when people were looked upon merely as masses and governed as such, down to the present day when in the American union a government prevails whose central idea and

The presentation of the bust of Dr. Angell to the University took place Tuesday afternoon, and was a fitting celebration by the graduating class of raised all the fees of the students $5. the twenty-five years of Dr. Angell's service as president of the University. The bust was made by Lorado Taft, of Chicago, and cost $500. Miss Ann L. Richards made the presentaiton speech on behalf of the class, speaking in high praise of Dr. Angell. Regent Cocker accepted it in an address which concluded as follows:

The University has been especially fortunate in the character and attainhave been chosen by the regents to test ments of its presidents. Gifted and scholarly men they have been and wisely have they planned. The state owes them a debt of gratitude for their devotion to its educational interests, and this University will ever gratefully acknowleage its indebtedness to these earnest men. The term of office of Dr. Angell has covered nearly half the life of the University, and his rare tact and wisdom have covered it with especial honor. Few have grasped as clearly as he has the needs and possibiliites of a great school of learning and have attained as satisfactory results.

Few can appreciate the embarrassment and difficulties of the president of college, particularly of a state university like our own. There are so many and so conflicting ideas as to the relattion of the state to higher education, so many local prejudices to satisfy, so many political ambitions to gratify, that a state institution encounters greater daagers and requires greater wisdom in administration than do other institutions of learning, whose policy is largely fixed by traditions, or whose interests are conserved by a rich and powerful constituency. To place the University in the front rank of the great schools of learning, with their rich endowments, to make the state known and respected abroad through its university, and in spite of opposing influences to make it the crowning glory of the state, require the highest wisdom University gratefully recognize the indebtedness of this institution of learning to the distinguished scholar who now presides so ably over its interests.

While Dr. Angell's reputation as an educator will rest largely on his administrative skill, and on the wonderful growth of the University during his occupancy of the presidency, he has gained other distinctions. It rarely happens that great executive ability is asso-ciated with exceptional knowledge of some one subject. A successful colso many different subjects that form a part of the work of a university that with many other notables, together with little opportunity is given or profound knowledge in any special line of literary and scientific work. It is greatly to the credit of the president of this Univerity that he is not only an accomplished teacher and rare scholar, but also an authority on international law. Twice the national government has selected him to perform important functions, which he has discharged with signal honor to himself and credit to the whole country. Whether as journalist or teacher or college president or embassador to a foreign court, he has the rare felicity of looking. 'On duties well performed and days

STORY OF A RASCALLY DECEPTION

Alleged to Have Deluded an Honest Girl into a Mock and Unacknowledged Marriage with a False License and Counterfest Judge_Details of an Infamous Deed _Discred ted by the Will Contest Law-

SAN FRANCISCO, June 27. - A sensational statement is published here to the effect Mrs. Wm. Arnold and daughter, of that the late Senator James G Fair seduced a young dressmaker named Miss McKenna by going through a mock marriage with her in 1892, and that two children are the result. Mrs. Lobo, who was instructing Miss McKenna at the time, was a friend of Fair, and makes the tollowing statement: "The marriage took place in 1892 in my house, 1069 Broadway street, Oakland, and I witnessed the ceremony. Senator Fair brought a man to the house with him to perform the ceremony, introducing him as Judge Crosby, but I doubt very much now whether it really was that gentleman.

Had a false License Also. "The senator produced a license and I read it over. Apparently it was all right. Then Miss McKenna and the senator signed it. She wanted to keep the paper, but he objected and insisted on putting it in his pocket and taking it away with him. They were very fond of one another and I was pleased, thinking it a real love match. He thought everything of her, and did up to the last-until his death. I think she was the love of his life. She thought everything of him, too, poor girl, and it broke her heart when she found he had deceived her and that the marriage was only a mock one. She was a good and virtuous girl, and when the senator Mr. and Mrs. Fred Field, of Tecum- found she would not go with him except as his bride he trapped her into an illegal marriage. He told me so when the second child was born.

> Trusted the senator's Judgment. "For a time after they were married they remained here, but soon left for Virginia City. The senator did not stay with her all the time. He was back and forth. He was not there when the first child was born, but the girl's mother was. The mother did not ascertain, and does not know today, who the father of her daugnter's children really is. In Virginia Cary Miss McKenna went by the name of Mrs. Murry. She knew there was some reason for the senator not acknowledging her as his wife, but she trusted to his judgment, thinking everything would some day be all right. Things went on in a quiet way, and she remained in Virginia City until a year ago last spring when she came down to child was born, and I was with her at the time. The child's birth was registered under the name of Murry. I remonstrated at this, telling the senator he should have the child properly registered. Then he very decidedly and coldly told me that his marriage with Miss McKenna was a mock one, and that he would never acknowledge death of her mother, who died Tuesday morning. Mrs. Flinn had been ill for some time, but not seriously until make the did not wish to do so during his life."

Attorneys Discredit the Story. The attorneys representing the various interests in the Fair estate discredit the Lobo story. All unite in declaring that it it absurd and untrue.

"I then took opportunities of conveyof a larger size; six tin tubes 3 inches feet in length; a quantity of a particular metallic substance, or semimetal, which I shall not name, and a dozen demijohns of a very common acid. The gas to be formed from these latter materials is a gas never yet generated by any other person than myself-or at least applied to any similar purpose. I can only venture to say here that it is a constituent of azote (nitrogen), so long considered irreducible, and that its density is about 37.4 times less than of hydrogen. It is tasteless, but not odorless; burns, when pure, with a greenish flame and is instantaneously fatal to 自己 animal life. Its full secret I would make no difficulty in disclosing, but that it of right belongs to a citizen of Nantes, in France, by whom it was conditionally communicated to myself." It must be confessed that the mysterions gas evolved by the force of Poe's imagination has not a little in common with the argon, whose acquaintance we are now privileged to make some 50 years later. The "particular metallic substance or semimetal," used by Hans Pfaall, has its fellow in clevite, from which we have been led to understand sentative mass meeting ever held in argon has been extracted when treated with an acid, after the manner of the veracious Dutch balloonist. If the new Republican convention to meet next year gas is not precisely regarded as "a conat the birthplace of the party. Mayor stituent of nitrogen," it has at least McKenna, a Democrat, presided. Mayor been declared by some to be an allotropic modification of it. No doubt the physical and chemical qualities of Edgar Allan Poe's gas are not exactly those of argon. But what of that? Instead, for example, of being 37 times lighter than hydrogen, argon, we understand, is very much heavier. It must be remembered, however, that Hans Pfaall had to make a journey to the moon. Had his gas been heavier, how could he have dropped a couple of ballast bags on the head of Mynheer Superbus Van Underduk, and have disappeared above the clouds almost before the worthy burgomaster had recovered himself? The romancer, even when he is a man of science, must surely be allowed a little latitude with his chemistry. - Westminster Gazette.

A SPANISH ANECDOTE.

A Moor Whose Son Was Killed Assists the Murderer to Escape.

A Spanish cavalier, in a sudden quarrel, slew a Moorish gentleman and fled. His pursuers soon lost sight of him, for he had unperceived thrown himself over a garden wall. The owner, a Moor, happening to be in his garden, was addressed by the Spaniard, on his knees, who acquainted him with his case and implored concealment. "Eat this," said the Moor, "you know that you may confide in my protection." He then locked him up in his garden apartment, telling him that as soon as it was night he would provide for his escape to a place

The Moor then went to his house, where he had just seated himself, when came to his gate, bringing the corpse of his son, who had just been killed by the Spaniard. When the first shock of surprise was a little over, he learned, from the description given, that the fatal deed was done by the very person then in his power. He mentioned this to no one, but as soon as it was dark, retired to his garden, as if to grieve alone, giving orders that none should follow him. Then, accosting the Spaniard, he said: "Christian, the person you have killed is my son; his body is now in my house. You led the astonished Spaniard to his stables, and mounted him on one of his fleetest horses, and said:

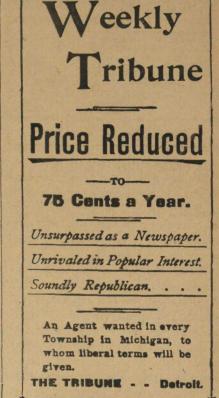

"Fly far while the night can cover you; you will be safe in the morning. You are indeed guilty of my son's blood, him I am innocent of yours, and that my faith given is preserved!" His point of honor is, it is said, most religiously observed by the Arabs and Saracens, from whom it was adopted by the Moors of Africa and by them was brought into Spain.

Then Kentuckey is a democratic state belonging to a section which the free coinage advocates have alleged to be deeply impregnated with that sentiment. An intensely warm campaign was waged throughout the state by the most eloquent and popular champions of the white metal. The guage of battle was accepted by the adherents of sound money and Secretary Carlisle, than whom there is no more lucid and forceful advocate, went home and gave the force of his wonderful logic to their side. The contest was continued in the state convention with no effort to dodge or traddle the issue. This action was in marked contrast with the recent doings of the convention of republican clubs at Cleveland. Had it been the regular democratic convention for nominating candidates for state offices, a purpose which would have interested the party as a whole, no doubt a contest for delegates would have been made which would have changed the composition of the convention. Had such a contest been waged there as was put up by the friends of sound money in Kentucky, they would unquestionably have been equally suc-

When "Coin" had garbled and galvanized facts and figures into his first book, he had covered the ground and all since has been an attempt to put back his poorly built fences and keep his voter friends in silver pasture. But it wouldn't do. They couldn't live on such a slimsy diet, neither could they stand the confines of so small a pasture. Then came the brilliant pieces from Punch tattooed upon his idea—a daily paper. "Coin" was to feed them in daily pastures and thus in crease their appetite for the food so that they might forget their narrow snakes and either skin them or preserve confines. Still at fault! Wood Paving.

A nonslipping wood pavement has been recently devised which is claimed to be simple, inexpensive and efficient. It consists in preparing the wooden blocks before they are laid by boring a few holes in them and filling the same with a hard setting substance composed cement. DAY OF THE DEAD IN PARIS.

Curious Scenes During the Pilgrimage to the Gravevards.

Paris, it is said, thinks once a year of those whom she has lost. The truth is she thinks very much oftener of them. for their touching devotion to the memory of the dead is one of the finest sides of the French character.

The day after All Saints' is the "day of the dead"-the jour des morts.

Then Parisians visit the great cemeteries - Pere Lachaise, Montmartre, Montparnasse, Passy, Vaugirard and Saint-Ouen. It is a curious sight to see the crowds sweeping like a torrent along the boulevards of Bellevue and Menilmontant between the two rows of booths piled up with emblems of grief and

About half the number are simple sightseers-badaubs, who are attracted by any crowd, and who can be readily recognized by their indifferent and gaping air and empty hands.

The others, in mourning habits, carry in their hands wreaths of everlasting flowers, sprigs of boxwood and yew, bouquets, medallions under glass, with a weeping willow and some artless inscription a ma mere, a notre pere, etc.

The cemeteries themselves present an unaccustomed spectacle. The entrances are guarded by mounted guardes de Paris in full uniform; policemen are stationed to regulate the circulation in the interior, and around the cemetery hawkers of all sorts spread out their wares in tempting array-immortelles for the dead, cakes and petit bleu-cheap wine -for the living.

Side by side with the sellers of souvenirs eterna you find the camelo, who offers his collection of 300 jokes for 1 cent; the open air lotteries with their grating and rattling wheels and an asthmatic hurdy gurdy playing the eternal "Boulanger March." This is the first act of the tragi-comedy.

Each proceeds to the tomb that interests him or her. The old wreaths are removed, and the glass covered medallion of the most approved design is hung up in their stead. -St. Louis Globe-Demo-

A Floral Detective of Long Ago.

In early times the Dutch farmers of the up river farms of New York had an ingenious way of recovering pocket knives that might have been dropped or mislaid while plowing or gardening was going on. Cutlery was not as cheap then and abundant as in these days; so the farmers took the thrifty precaution of keeping two or three sunflower seeds in their knife handles. Then if the knives fell upon broken ground and could not be readily found, the owners would wait until the seeds sprouted, and an isolated sunflower stalk or blossom in field o patch would signalize the possibility of a missing article's being at its root. True, the owner did not always realize the result of the scheme, because a passing boy who understood the token often "got there" before the planter.-New York Tribune.

The 4-year-old quickly spoke up that he had been there. His mother told him that he certainly could not remember it, but the child said that he could. His mother asking him what it looked like, Johnnie replied, looks like a great big ocean going awful fast."—Albany Journal.

The old friends, the old friends W-loved when we were young, With sunshine on their faces And music on their tongues! The bees are in the almond flower,
The birds renew their strain, But the old friends, once lost to us.

The old friends, the old friends! Their brow is lined with care;
They've furrows in the faded cheek
And silver in the hair,
But to me they are the old friends still,
In youth and bloom the same
As when we drove the flying ball

Or shouted in the game. The old men, the old men,

How slow they creep along! How naughtily we scoffed at them In days when we were young! Their prosing and their dozing, Their prate of times gone by, Their shiver like an aspen leaf If but a breath went by.

But we, we are the old men now, Our blood is faint and chill; We cannot leap the mighty brook Or climb the breakneck hill. We maunder down the shortest cuts, We rest on stick or stile,

And the young men, half ashamed to laugh. Yet pass us with a smile.

But the young men, the young men,
Their strength is fair to see—
The straight back and the springy stride,

The eye as falcon free,
The shout above the frolic wind
As up the hill they go,
But though so high above us now
They soon shall be as low.

Oh, weary, weary drag the years As life draws near the end,
And sadly, sadly fall the tears
For loss of love and friend.
But we'll not doubt there's good about
In all of human kind; So here's a health before we go To those we leave behind.

THE ICONOCLAST.

Young Mr. Broughton was, unawares and gradually, in process of evolution carefully mending a broken figure. The from the journalist to the newspaper man. It took all sorts of rubs and surprises and facers and disillusions to form him. That morning he was hurrying through Printing House square on an assignment, when he noticed before him a woman carrying on her head a tray of plaster images and walking with the stately gait and even poise of the south Italian. She was small, brown. She wore a gown of blue cotton, a woolen shawl, plaided in olive and yellow, and a red kerchief on her head. These glaring colors, however, made her a picture. To observe her Broughton passed by her and then looked back.

Broughton had no particular use for a praying Samuel, but he had various themight have acquired something in the plaster cast line if at that moment a broad shouldered fellow had not come and jostled the little woman so roughly that the tray was thrown from her head and went ruining to the sidewalk. It was the end of the world for that population of graven images. They fell in a heap of indistinguishable fragments, mingling their dust in a complete de-mocracy of saints, politicians, lambs, the three graces, and even a model of a beautiful foot labeled Trilby. Little Samuel was past praying for, but he was no more thoroughly pulverized than the bust of Napoleon. Young Mr. Broughton felt stirring within him an essay on the frailty of mundane things. Then the the woman.

Why-a you hit-a me? What I ever done at you-a? You break-a my image-I not eat-a more!" she rattled her finger nails along her front teeth to indicate the hunger which would be the consequence of the breaking of her stock in trade.

Meanwhile two bootblacks had seized the man by the elbows, and turning him around ran him back face to face with the woman. She stood wringing her hands and wailing. "What ruin! Poor-a

The aggressor was evidently also an Italian.

"Soy!" one of the bootblacks said. "Youse has gotter reach down inter yer clothes an square up wid de dago loidy. "He's a bloomin dago hisself," commented the other boy.

Broughton had been painfully composing a few phrases of such colloquial Italian as his Harvard studies of Dante had rendered possible to him, and now uttered them in a stiff and toneless accent. In effect, he said that it was necessary to pay the compatriot for that which was broken. "I only got a ten cent-a, signor," said the offender, handing the coin to the woman. He was permitted to go in

"Ten-a cent-a! Madonna mia! For so mooch image!" sobbed she.

So Broughton put $1 into his own hat and passed it around among the throng that had been attracted by the noise. When he gave the collection to the woman, she wiped her eyes, kissed his hands with many benedictions, and went her Broughton's assignment had taken him in the direction of Mulberry bend. As he returned through that quarter he saw a hundred yards in front of him a woman with a tray of images on her head. He quickened his pace and soon was near her. It was the same Italian; she had replenished her tray with more saints and heroes and graces. "So it is," I would not be without it in mused young Mr. Broughton-who still trailed clouds of the glory of journalism -"that in this world no one is indispensable. One perishes, another replaces him!

Just then, swaggering around a corner, appeared the former breaker of images, and again, as if on purpose, he swung his arm rudely against the wom-As before, a crash, lamentations and a crowd. The dwellers of Mulberry bend, themselves well acquainted with poverty, gave of their few copper coins to her, who sat wailing among the ruins of her wares. They helped her to pick up such of the casts as were not irremediably broken and to replace them on the tray. This time Broughton did not stay to act as consoler. The aggressor had walked off rapidly, and the reporter followed him. After five minutes' chase they turned into an unspeakably dirty alley, where the Italian entered a door way without noticing that any one pursued him. Broughton, having made sure that he should recognize the house again, hastened to the nearest police station and told the story.

"She was a quiet, decent little body," he said to the officer. "That great, hulking brute struck her on purpose the sec ond time, even admitting that the first time might have been by accident."

Two policemen were detailed to accompany Mr. Broughton, who was known to the chief of the station, and he led them straight to the door where the Italian had entered. Up the dark and broken stairs they climbed. Broughton shrunk from contact with the slimy walls. It seemed to him that evil odors were depositing themselves there in a pestilential fungous growth. At last they emerged upon a landing. A child leaned over the baluster of the story above. Broughton tossed him a nickel.

"My little man, is there an Italian living in this house?"

The child picked up the coin and stared in silence.

"Say, kid, is dere a dago here?" one of the policemen translated.

The boy pointed with a thumb to a door at the left of the landing where the three men stood. Broughton felt the thrill of the righteous avenger. The malicious brute who had twice destroyed the wares of the poor little image vender would soon be sent to the island. And a good riddance for the community. One of the police opened the door, and they entered. They saw at one side of the room a long work bench, covered with plaster images. The iconoclast sat there,

"Yes, you're all right," said Broughton impulsively. "It was my mistake I owe you a dollar for it." And he laid ories about our adopted citizens and a silver dollar on the work bench of the maker, breaker and mender of images. The Italian looked up with a real Neapolitan smile, radiant, many toothed, wide and irresponsible.

"Tell me about it," said the reporter. "You not give-a me 'way, gent'men

All this time the wife stood with four rather clean and very beautiful children "O Madonna!" Next she denounced clinging to her skirts, and peeping shyly

Indeed Broughton has never formulated his views upon the case, although he used to take social problems very se rionsly. Whenever he meets Pietro in the street they exchange a glance of intelligence. Sometimes the Neapolitan, by a quick gesture, indicates Marianna farther along the avenue.

And then Broughton, if he has time, assists at the -nth performance of the comedy of the iconoclast.—Elizabeth Pullen in St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

The French Capture of Malta.

Yes, it was a sanguine expedition which, all unconscious of its danger, sailed away for Malta." The geographical situation of that island makes it in proper hands the citadel of the Mediterranean, the bulwark of Christendom against heathendom. But the military monks to whom it had been intrusted had grown corrupt and licentious. French agents had already been among them, and such was their timidity at the approach of Bonaparte that after the merest show of resistance to his de mands the gates of an almost impregnable fortress were dishonorably opened to the French republic without a blow. Waiting only to garrison this easy conquest and to establish a French administration, Bonaparte hastened on, and the entire fleet in good condition anchored off Alexandria on June 30. With a few casualties the troops were landed, and the vessels were left to cruise along the shore and to destroy the English when they should appear. - Professor Sloane's "Life of Napoleon" in Century.

Waterproofing.

To make materials waterproof, mix together one pound of sugar of lead and one pound of alum, pounded separately, and pour over it 2 quarts of boiling water. Let stand for six hours and bottle for use. It should be applied with a sponge or soft brush until the material is thoroughly wet. It should then be ironed and hung up to dry.

Rain and Railway Tracks.

Locomotive engineers like to have the tracks watered occasionally by a good heavy rain, as they get glossy after a long period of dry weather and the wheels will not take hold, just as the knife grinder's wheel will not take hold unless it is kept wet.

A GRAND TRIUMPH.

Baffled Many Times but Success Comes at Last.

(From the Grand Rapids Press.)

The following incident would be hard to believe if it had not occurred right here in Grand Rapids, and investigation by our representative has placed it beyond the reach of doubt. These are the facts in reach of doubt. These are the facts in detail: Mr. J. H. White of No. 25 Haifley Place, has been an instructor in penman Place, has been all independent ship in different business colleges for the ship in different years. He says: "Last Ocpast fourteen years. He says: "Last October I was suddenly taken ill. I consulted a physician, who said the pain was from 'gravel' stones; gradually grew worse; the pain was in my back and side. My back swelled up in a great rige, and I finally grew so bad that I was taken to bed, as helpless as a child. I passed blood, and when the pain was at its worst I was like one crazy. The doctor injected morphine to give me relief, but further than that he said he was powerless, and nothing would do me any good but a surgical operation. I believe my flesh was literally cooked in the attempts to relieve my agony, everything was used, mustard plasters, turpentine, hot cloths and all such things. I was in this condition, given up by the doctor, and almost out of my mind with suffering. I commenced taking Doan's Kidney Pills, and really I felt easier in 20 minutes. After about two hours I had a passage of urine, and passed blood and some 'gravel' stones which greatly relieved me. I rapidly improved. I took in all six boxes, and I feel to-day entirely well. Mine has been a wonderful case. I feel that I cannot say anything strong enough for Doan's Kidney Pills. My great wish is that they may become well known. They will prove a boon to man-

COLLABORATION.

If you are a man who values a peaceful domestic life above all things; if you happen to possess a bright and companionable young wife, with ideas of her own; if you are secretly immensely proud of her and her "parts," but fearful lest you encourage in her an arro- impossible. How to wipe him tenderly gance of equality with you and your own, then beware of moments of sympathy and keep a guard upon your tongue in hours of confidence, lest they lead to man would say, dear," he suggested the death of all future communion; mildly. lest, in short, peradventure they tempt you into collaboration with your wife.

In the case of Jones its beginning was very insidious. Somes had a magnificent idea for a plot. It was modern, without being unspeakable—never was there a happier conception. But it had a flaw. There was a hitch in the action which disturbed the flow. Jones stared wildly at the paper on which he had jotted down "Outline of Plot" in his boldest hand. Staring did not seem to bring inspiration, and Jones forgot himself so far as to stamp upon the floor.

His wife heard the unwonted sound. She was giving the children their nursery tea at the time, and a little plaster fell off the ceiling into one of their bread and milk bowls. She went up

"What's the matter with the poor boy, then?" she inquired. "The nursery ceiling's coming down. And what has he done to his nice smooth hair?' "Oh, don't be an idiot!" groaned

Jones. "I've got the finest idea I ever and important at once. She was a fair, pretty woman, with brown eyes and a little chin that stuck out.

"Tell me," said she coaxingly, settling on the arm of his big leather chair. Jones saw no warning shadow of coming collaboration.

"I'll just give you an idea of my plot," he said, and proceeded to do so. The "idea" took three-quarters of an hour to give. His wife listened, at first with a preoccupied air. She could not forget that an open jam pot stood on the nursery table at baby's elbow. Soon, however, the full beauty of the thing to read me." burst upon her. She got down from the with fervor. "Talk of Stevenson indeed," she said compassionately, "or your Merediths and Hardys and people!"

"Come, come!" said Jones. He tried to tell her dryly "not to be an idiot," but the words would not come as easily as usual. After all, real appreciativeness is a rare gift.

"Write it straight away off, dear," she begged. "Write it, and get the money for it.

"That would have occurred to me if I'd thought a minute longer," said

"Course it would, the clever boy!" said his wife soothingly, and she began to expand her plot. Jones listened patiently, sometimes vouchsafing encouragement, and she looked so pretty, so flushed and eager over it, that he was touched. In a demented moment he uttered the words that risked the happiness of two lives. "Why shouldn't we write it together?" he said. Once said, there was no unsaying it. Without a word his wife arose and went straight to the nearest stationer's. There she bought ten reams of manuscript paper and 2 shillings' worth of pens. All the rest of the day she was remarkably silent. Jones addressed her at the dinner table with a remark that had never yet failed to please.

"I always like you in that dress," he said. "It's a pretty idea, having those sleeves one can see the arms through. It's called net, or tulle, or something, isn't it?'

"One moment, please, dear," answered his wife, and her lips moved mutely, in visible composition.

Then Jones remarked that her hair was arranged with less frivolity than usual. It showed more of her forehead, which gave an intellectual look. This was aided by a somewhat aggressive ink stain on one of her fingers.

Jones felt much as he did toward his baby boy when that infant played at "being grown up and doin like dadda." He patted his wife's cheek. She received the advance with a touch of dignity. Jones began to feel a trifle irritated, and he scraped his foot under the table.

Next day, when he came back from his office, he found the plaster knocked out of the wall in three places. Trampling feet were heard in his own sacred study, and two finely developed young men from Shaplemann's jostled him in his agitated progress up the stairs. He burst into his sanctum, to find it filled by a writing table. Near the abomination stood his wife, regarding it with brown eyes full of pensive pride.

'What in the world is this thing doing here?" gasped Jones.

"Why, you couldn't write anything decent without a writing table and how can you expect me to?" she inquired. Her air was so important, yet withal so guilty, that Jones subdued his indignation and tried to laugh. When they had after all. -Texas Siftings.

The evening saw them both established at their desks. The horrid impossibility of it all struck upon Jones only too soon. He had written the opening chapter in his best manner, and the time came when he wanted to read it out. To give her her due, his wife lisyo' kin go sot on de battry en git nice tened eagerly, and did him full justice when he ceased.

"And now listen to mine," she said blithely.

Jones felt it to be his own act and deed, and he resigned himself to listen. Her chappter was really not badly written! Her style was evidently modeled on his own. Jones put his finger tips together and smiled hopefully. But when it came to her hero, alas! not only had he "a comb at the back of his head," as Stevenson puts it, but he was altogether out of the chapter without breaking of hearts? Jones fidgeted distressfully.

"That's not quite the sort of thing a

"Oh, isn't it!" she answered, with derision. "As it happens, a man did say it—those very words. Do you imagine you know how every kind of man talks to a woman when he's alone with her?' "Heaven forbid!" said Jones. "And who said it to you, may I ask?"

"I didn't say it was said to me," she replied, with some haste. "How do you like this ending? I think it's rather neat, don't you? 'And when they had both left the conservatory there was something frail and pink lying on the marble floor. It was a moss rose bud.' I rather admire that sort of ending.

"Where is the point?" inquired Jones. "Oh, well, if you want points to every single sentence"-

"Well, but don't you see that unless you mean something by it there's no sense at all in the thing? It's simply Family Herald 'business.' I should have thought you'd have seen that."

"It's a matter of taste, and I differ from you," said his wife very coldly, "and if we are to pick holes in each had in my life, and now I'm simply other's work allow me to tell you that no lady would have behaved as your His wife's little face became grave heroine did in that hansom!"

"Why, that actually hap"-began

Jones unwarily.
"I knew it!" cried his wife, overturning the ink bottle. "It was that day you saw Kitty Cameron home from the theater. I thought so at the time! She shall never enter my house again."

Jones was enraged, but saw a possible "score."

"It was on the same day," he said slowly, with a painstaking smile, "as that on which you permitted yourself to be addressed by a man, not your husband, in the way you so tastefully chose

There was a silence. They glared at arm of Jones' chair and embraced him one another. Then Jones' wife got up and left the room with a queenly step, closing the door behind her with ostentatious gentleness.

Jones heard no more about collaborating for some time, but next day the bill came in for the writing table-7

Tardy Praise For Boswell.

The London Standard showed a becoming respect for letters by devoting a "leader" the other day to the memory of Boswell, whose death took place a century ago. It makes perhaps more of a tragedy of his end than the facts quite justify, but it does recognize his place in literature, which after all is the es-sential. His follies were not greater than Goldsmith's, and yet the world by a silly trick went on sniffing at "Bozzy" for generations. That nonsense is happily now about dead. We are beginning to speak fittingly of one of the greatest writers in literature. Boswell is to all other biographers what Shakespeare is to other poets. Lockhart's 'Life of Scott" is admirable, but it has only to be compared to the "Life of Johnson" to show Boswell's superiority. Is it not time that the great biographer had his own life worthily written?—St. James Gazette.

The Two Turkeys.

Mr. Lanigan's fable of "The Two Turkeys" has a fine cynical flavor that prodigal sons will relish: "An honest farmer once led his two turkeys into his granary and told them to eat, drink and be merry. One of these turkeys was wise and one foolish. The foolish bird at once indulged excessively in the pleasures of the stable, unsuspicious of the future, but the wiser fowl, in order that he might not be fattened and slaughtered, His wife started a little elaborately, and fasted continually, mortified his flesh and devoted himself to gloomy reflections upon the brevity of life. When Thanksgiving approached, the honest farmer killed both turkeys, and by placing a rock in the interior of the prudent turkey made him weigh more than his plumper brother.

HOW MANY WIVES ARE THUS?

The Many Virtues She Should Have to Best Please Her Husband.

The good wife is always good. Nothing puts her out. She may have neuralgia, a tipsy cook and twins who always cry at the same time, but she never looks cross or speaks hastily, and she always sees that dinner is ready at the proper moment. The children may have mumps, chicken pox and measles, and the plumbers may have stopped the Croton water because they are fixing the main pipe; the baker, butcher and milkman may present their little bills with exasperating frequency and with reproachful remarks appended, and the iceman may have "struck," but when husband comes she always smiles beautifully and has something nice and cool all ready in the refrigerator.

She never mentions disagreeable bills to the partner of her soul and never asks for money, but she is always nicely dressed in cool, fluted muslins, or good, rich cashmere, or something like that No dowdy calico wrappers on her. She makes everything herself—out of noth ing—elegantly.

She is charming. All the men envy him, but she never flirts. She is always so glad to have his ma live with them, and to take her advice in everything. But, most of all, when he comes home at 4 o'clock in the morning, walking very feebly and with exceedingly weak knees, she never casts a doubt upon his statement that "they've been taking stock down at our place," whatever may be the season of the year, and she always pities him for having to work so hard.—Philadelphia Times.

Castles In the Air.

Build a castle in the air and live in it occasionally. It is a delightful bit of unreal estate, free from every discomfort, from a mortgage to a gas meter. Practical people will condemn your folly, but what of that? When the eaves of your cottage seem to press on your brain, or your flat shrinks to a 10 by 12 inclosure, move out, take possession of your castle and revel in it, if only for 20 minutes. The brief respite will help you wonderfully, and even if your airy dwelling does come down with a crash you will crawl out of the ruins better prepared to grapple with mundane cares. -New Orleans Times-Democrat.

WILLED TO DEATH.

The doctor paled. Decidedly it was something more than mere embarrassment that caused his unwillingness.

"I have given it up, ladies," said he. "I have nothing more to do with magnetism.

"But why, why, doctor?" the pretty pleaders persisted. "Put us to sleepone of us-you must, or tell us the reason why.

"Well, so be it," said he at last, still visibly reluctant. "I will tell you why. It may teach you a lesson.

'Eighteen months ago,' he began, "I went into the country to see a friend. We will call him Paul, if you please. Though old comrades and devoted 'chums,' for a long time the chances of life had separated us, particularly his marriage, which, for certain reasons, had obliged him to locate for awhile upon one of his properties, situated, as I have said, in the depths of the country. But often and often my thoughts carried me—a trifle enviously in the midst of my hard work-toward that forgotten corner where his hours were passed in the quiet routine and bliss of a domestic life.

"Nor was I mistaken in the picture my fancy had drawn. Peace, serenity, repose, breathed from the very trees, with their great moss covered trunks, against which an old chateau leaned in the mingled shade and shine of the sunny Provence woods. "Paul met me at the station. His wife I did not see till later—just before dinner indeed—a beautiful woman, with dark, brilliant eyes, which flashed when not shielded by the long, curling lashes, with the light of burnished steel. She had a superb figure and a complexion the tint and texture of old ivory, through which was flowing vigorously the rich red current of a healthy blood. Very, very beautiful she was; but, oddly enough, as I looked at her I felt a sense of a deception somewhere under that "Was it fancy? Or was this full, robust beauty but similar to a too fervid summer that forces the sap to rise so fast that the fruit turns sour? I do not know, only that this woman entered with difficulty into the idyl I had evoked from the shadowy aisles of these old woods, that seemed always whispering and murmuring to themselves.

"Her intense vitality seemed to shatter this setting of peace and serenity. Moreover, we were not alone; another guest had arrived—a young man and a close neighbor. From the moment of his coming too-or did I fancy that also? -Paul, my friend, seemed less genial. The first joy in his eyes at my arrival had calmed; I saw him now in his habitual state, doubtless, a little aged, slightly constrained, with that vague, nervous reserve of the distrustful husband who in his inmost thoughts suspects treachery.

"I had no time, however, to ponder long on these reflections. Old memories, serious and gay, crowded thick and fast upon us in the ease and comfort of that well ordered dining room, looking out upon the lawn, the soft melancholy of the coming twilight slowly enwrapping us and carrying hearts and minds both far back into the past.

"Dinner was nearly over when a chance word or question turned the conversation upon a subject no less absorbing then than now, ladies"-and the doctor bowed courteously to the circle of eager listeners closely clustered about him-"turned, I say, upon the subject of hypnotism and hypnotic suggestion.

"My friend, from the first discoveries, had watched the advance of these studies with the liveliest interest, and many and frequent had been the discussions between himself and his wife concerning them, she denying the phenomena arising from these experiments and stubbornly pronouncing them humbug and charlatanism, and he affirming that strange things could and did happen, as he knew from his own experience—a certain evening in Paris, when he had offered himself as a 'subject' as incredulous as she, and had been put to sleep promptly and made to accomplish in his sleep things of which they told him afterward.

"'Bah! They duped you!' insisted his wife. 'Doctor,' suddenly appealing to me, 'help me to get this rubbish out of his head or Paul will certainly go

"Forced to take sides, I was obliged to admit that I myself was deeply inter ested in these matters, and had witnessed things that I did not dare to doubt. She was still obstinate, still mocking. She would believe what she saw-no more,

"'If Paul is a subject, as he declares," said she, 'the thing, too, is easy enough. Convince me-you have done such things, you say-by trying it here and

"Paul was willing. I looked intently at him. His eyes wavered curiously away from my gaze. He was a marvel-

"The evening finished gayly with a To the Common Council of the City of rubber of whist, ending at 10 in order to give the handsome young neighbor a silent listener to what had been going on—time enough to reach home at a reasonable hour.

"'Come, quick,' said I. 'He has gone for that paper knife!'

"She remained motionless.

"'To what good?' she said. 'I see already that suggestion has reason in it, for Paul has gone. He will come back madder than ever, I suppose.

"I did not wait for her to finish. I hastened to the drawing room, where my 'subject' had gone.

What looked at the time like a close call for Ingersoll occurred six or seven years ago in New York, when he and the gifted Daniel Dougherty were arrayed against each other in a divorce case before Judge Barrett. Dougherty was for the husband. He closed his case in !

"Through all this dreadful case, this struggle for what should be to her many thousand times dearer than life, has a veil mantled that beautiful face? Has one tear rolled down those cheeks? Has there been a single blush on that face? Not a tear! Not a blush!" He shook his fist at Ingersoll as he said this.

"Do you state that as a fact?" asked the infidel.

"Then I tell you it is untrue." "Consider yourself challenged," shouted the Philadelphian.

"Let us have no interruptions," said Judge Barrett, showing great anxiety and displeasure.

"Well, then, he must not look at me when he says untruths," said Ingersoll, shaking all over with rage.

Injuries From Horses.

An old cavalignan says that a horse will never step on a man intentionally. It is a standing order in the English cavalry that, should a man become dismounted, he must lie down and keep perfectly still. If he does so, the entire troop will pass over him without his being injured. A horse notices where he is going, and is on the lookout for a firm foundation to put his foot on. It is an instinct with him, therefore, to step over a prostrate man. The injuries By Ald.
