STATE NEWS Cadillac has had 100 consecutive days' leighing so far this winter.

The office of the county clerk of Cal-noun county was entered by burglars recently and $500 taken. The money belonged to the clerk, Wm. F. Neale. James H. Stone has been appointed llector of internal revenue for the first disrict of Michigan, to succeed Gen. Trowbridge, he present incumbent. Two Marshall youngsters stole $50 from a hardware firm of that city and boarded a west-bound freight train. Before going they purchased a seven-shooter apiece and other weapons with which to slay the Indians encountered.

Battle Creek's public library is one of the best in the state. It contains 5,500 volumes and 800 or more are added each year. Several years ago H. D. Denman died and bequeathed $10,000 to the library. Its annual circulation s now 30,000 volumes.

The body of John Otte has been found in Plaster creek, a mile south of Grand Rapids. He left his home about two months ago in a somewhat demented condition, caused by re ligious study, and no tidings of him have been had until the body was found among the drift-

Michigan owns 445 steamers, with a onnage of 34,086; Illinois, 136 steamers, 20,428 tons; Wisconsin, 132 steamers, 26,500 tons. From these figures it will be seen that Michigan has 177 more steamers than Illinois and Wisconsin together, or 309 more than Illinois nd 322 more than Wisconsin. Mrs. Laura S. Haviland, whose noble and self-sacrificing career in behalf of the poor, ne oppressed and the suffering has passed into the oppressed and the suffering has passed into history, has been spending some weeks in Lansing. The soldiers remember her as their best friend, the colored people their protector in the days of bondage, and many homeless waifs, who have been reared and educated by her exertions, look upon her as more than a mother. None among the many women whose whole existance has been passed in relieving human distress, deserve better of the people of Michigan than does Mrs. Hayiland.

Tobacco men are very much agitated over the omission of the words "or dealers" after the word "manufacturers" in the latter part of one of the provisions of the new tariff law. Officials state that the omission is purely accidental. A decree has been gazetted probibiting the importation of American hog products, including sides of bacon and sausages. The decree goes into force a month after its promulgation. The assent of the reichstag is not requisite. The semi-official press represents the measure as a purely sanitary one. Liberals denounce it as protective in its character.

The rumor that the constitutionality of the tariff act will be questioned is denied. The manufacturers as a class are not affected by the new law, and the few industries that do suffer would not be benefited by an appeal to the courts.

In the House of Commons a few days ago Parnell brought up his bill amending the land act, declaring that agitation in Ireland would continue to increase until the act was amended. She struggled to escape but seeing their daggers fell in a swoon. Lady Florence did not recover from her swoon for several hours, and it was only at intervals that the story could be elicited from her. The saving of her life is attributed to her St. Bernard dog, which, it is supposed, protected her while she lay in the swoon. Lady Florence had no reason to suspect immediate danger, although she had been somewhat fearful since the receipt of letters about the land league. The last thing she remembers is one of the men pushing a quantity of mud in her mouth. On her recovery she found both palms cut across and her gloves

A Wolf's Dislike for Music.

It is well known that domestic dogs dislike music, but the hatred of it seems to be much stronger in a wolf. Dogs become familiar with it, and have learned to endure it, but to the wolf it is intolerable. It would be well for those who live in countries infested by wolves to arm themselves with some loud-sounding musical instrument, as the follow-which seemed to be very ravenous. The poor man could think of no other way to save his life than to open his wallet and try the effect of hospitality He did so, and the savage beast swallowed all that was thrown to him with him such voracity that it seemed as if his appetite was not in the least degree satisfied.

The whole stock of provision was, of course, soon spent, and now the man's only resource was in the virtues of his bagpipe. This the monster no sooner heard than he took to the mountains as suddenly as he had left them. The poor piper did not wholly enjoy his deliverance, for, looking sadly at his empty wallet, he shook his fist at the departing animal, saying: "Ay! are these your tricks? Had I known your humor, you should have had your music before your supper."

the Davis house at Sheridan on the morning of the 17th, which proved to be the most destructive fire ever known there, burning up an entire block. The losses are as follows: W. B. Davis, hotel and stable, $8,000, insurance $1,000; A. M. Stebbins & Co., jewelers, $1,000, no insurance; G. W. Richards, drugs, insured $2,800; J. B. Haynes, general store, $15,000, insurance $6,000; Barney Pitcher, saloon, $2,000 no insurance. A stiff breeze was prevailing at the time of the fire, and several buildings located two or three squares away were set on fire by cinders, but were promptily extinguished.

Sprague, of Cohoctah, Livingston Co., accidentally shot himself through the head recently.
He was about 70 years of age, and had made a practice of hunting every winter for a number of years; hence his name, Hunter Sprague.
He went out to hunt about in the morning, saying he would be back to dinner. His family heard the report of his gun and expected him soon. As he did not come they went to look for him. He was found near the house, on the ice of a brook. He lay on the ice with a charge of shot in his head. One barrel of the gun was empty. A charge of barrel of the gun was empty. A charge of powder was in the other barrel and some shot was lying on the ice. From the appearance it supposed that Mr. Sprague was loading one barrel of his gun, when his foot slipped on the ice and the other barrel was discharged, killing him instantly.

Deputy Sheriff George C. Rogers of Battle Creek says that the girl, Annie E. Prosser, who was supposed to have been drowned in the Kalamazoo river, just previous to the suit of Dr. F. W. Bathrick against the Post and Tribune Company of Detroit, in which case she was an important witness, is still alive and well, and was seen by a man in whom he has entire confidence, and to whom she was well known, in the state of New York recently. Rogers states that he has been well enough posted all through the matter, not to be gulled into losing any time looking in the river for a body he knew was not there, and those whom the $25 reward enticed into the search, will now know the reason of their failure. The river has been an object of interest to several parties, who have searched its winding length several miles west, with boats and strong "jack lights" with no returns, and the story of the deputy finds many believers.

The Union party are seeking to allay the suspicions of their opponents by urging visit the classes and see how the work is 1841, and that Captain Cobb was drowned that as this election is for unpartisan offices it is of no particular consequence and will have no effect fon the national elections which follow. But we know too well the hypocrisy of this cry when we consider what would be their boast and exultation if their ticket, or a part of it, were elected. It has upon it no men of distinguished ability, yet they hope to put it through by their own efforts assisted by the general apathy of the Republicans. To show their insincerity in another way, we have but to call attention to the specious cry they have raised against Mr. O'Brien for being a railroad attorney, whereas he has never been in that position. Then, to make their argument appear all the more hypocritical, we would Champlin, who for years has been employed by railroad corporations.

Progress and Poverty." An economic treatise, by Henry George. John W. Lovell, 14 Vesey street, N. Y. 410 pp. 16 mo. 20 cents.

The work gives a clear exposition of some good ideas in interest, wages and Helphenstine, Druggist, Washington, D. C. rent. It makes a careful inquiry into the cause of industrial depressions and proposes a remedy against increase of want, with increase of wealth. The discussion is a practical, sensible one, and it is written in good style.

> Dust: A novel by Julian Hawthorne. Fords, Howard & Hulbert, N. Y., cloth decorated, green and silver. 402 pp. Price, $1.25.

As a continued story in "Our Continent," "Dust" was eagerly read, and it proved so popular that it was decided to put it between covers. Its complications are those of London society, and they are supposed to have taken place in the early part of the century. The story is told by Julian Hawthorne in an entertaining way which is so maintained that the interest in the plot is kept until the denouement. His style is much different from that of his father, Nathaniel Hawthorns, in that it is direct, and perspicuous, and no trace of a fondness for wierdness is evident. The book is handsomely gotten up in the binding of the "Our Continent" Library.

The Magazine of Art gives us in the April unmber for a frontispiece an engraving of Rosetti's "Il Ramoscello" accompanied by a sketch of him as a painter. The English side is represented by a description and engravings of "An Old English Manor House," "The South Downs as a Sketching-ground" and "Two Old London Markets." An interesting series of pictures is that representing the five senses, while the most striking of the engravings in this number is the last, that of "The Mermaid." Cassell, Petter, Galpin & Co., are the publishers.

The contents of "The Popular Science Monthly" for April, besides being well varied, are all of a character to command leading place is given to an essay by Prof. Sheldon Amos, on the "Nature and Lim-Economical Function of Vice" John McElroy takes the novel ground that men's vicious propensities play an important part in natural selection and the improvement of mankind. The "Progress of the Backboned Family," by Arabella B. Buckley, is a presentation of the life-history of vertebrate animals. Dr. Oswald concludes his entertaining and sometimes sarcastic "Curiosities of Superstition." AYER'S Hair Vigor faded or gray hair to a natural, rich brown color, or deep black, as may be desired. By its use light or red hair may be darkened, thin hair thickened, and baldness often, though not always, cured. It checks falling of the hair, and stimulates a weak and sickly growth to vigor. It prevents and oures scurf and dandruff, and heals nearly every lisease peculiar to the scalp. As a Ladies' Hair Dressing, the Vigor is unequalled; it contains neither oil nor dye, renders the hair soft, glossy, and silken in appearance, and imparts a delicate, agreeable, and lasting perfume.

MR. C. P. BRICHER writes from Kirby, O., July 3, 1882: "Last fall my hair commenced falling out, and in a short time I became nearly bald. I used part of a bottle of AVER'S HAIR VIGOR, which stopped the falling of the hair, and started a new growth. I have now a full head of hair growing vigorously, and am convinced that but for the use of your preparation I should have been entirely bald."

J. W. BOWEN, proprietor of the McArthur (Ohio) Enquirer, says: "AVER'S HAIR VIGOR is a most excellent preparation for the hair. I speak of it from my own experience. Its use promotes the growth of new hair, and makes it glossy and soft. The VIGOR is also a sure cure for dandruff. Not within my knowledge has the preparation ever failed to give entire satisfaction." MR. ANGUS FAIRBAIRN, leader of the cele

Miss Lottie Belle Saunders, of the highest class of the third ward school, feels somewhat proud of the fact, that owing to her high standard during the past term, she alone of all the girls, has a week's vacation-as it is unnecessary for her to be re-examined.

Wednesday night Grand Lecturer G. W. Robertson, of Mt. Clemens, and Grand Master, C. F. R Bellows, of Ypsilanti, were in the city, and gave a school of instruction in Masonic Hall. Visitors were present from Saline, Chelsea, Dexter, Ypsilanti and Manchester.

The opera house was full Wednesday evening to hear Maggie Mitchell. As a play Little Barefoot amounted to nothing, but so long as it gave her a chance to show her genius, the audience was satisfied. Parties were present from Saline, Dexter, Ypsilanti and Chelsea.

A pleasant evening was passed at the Methodist parsonage last Friday when Mr. and Mrs. Pope gave a reception to the members of the Mission Circle and their friends. During the evening several hundred of the young folks availed themselves of the opportunity of being present.

When Mercury was the messenger of the gods he had a reputation for being the 'swift-footed." Last Sunday his namesake followed his example and in six hours ran from 50° down to 20°; and on Tuesday forenoon in six hours it went from 12° below zero to 70° above. Pretty fair time for a modern imitator.

On account of a misplaced switch the outh bound passenger train was derailed Tuesday atternoon at the Y on the Toledo road near the jail. The engine ran off, and it was not until early the next morning that the hands succeeded in getting it again on the track. In the meantime all traffic north on the road was suspended.

The case of Joe Bull, for assaulting his wife, was tried in court Tuesday, and the jury, after being out a few hours, returned with a verdict of guilty. He has not yet been sentenced. One of the features of the trial was the bringing of a crowd of tramps from jail to testify as to his actions, but their testimony very properly was not admitted.

The new editors of the High School Index for next term have been appointed by the teachers, and are as follows: chairman, M. L. Fox; editorials, Miss M. L. Taylor; literature, Miss F. W. Potter; exchanges, Miss Clara Mack; reviews, Miss C. H. Gelston; locals, H. H. Cushing; personals, F. M. Sessions; business manager, W. R. Trowbridge.

Francis Stofflet; Justice, (vacancy) George Moore; Justice, (full term) John M. Chase; Supervisors, 1st dist., D. M. Finley; 2d dist., John D. Boylan; 3d dist., Benjamin Brown.

At the Unitarian Church next Sunday there will be in the morning a special Easter service for old and young, with commemoration of members of the congregation who have died during the year, and welcome of new members joining the church. In the evening Mr. Sunderland's subject will not be "God" as announced, but "The Church, its Meaning and Value as understood by Unitarians."

E. G. Embler, an attorney of Howell, was in the city last week on business connected with the estate of Edward Pacey late of the township of Scio. Mr. Pacey made a will leaving his two children by a former marriage, who reside in the township of Putnam, Livingston county, only one hundred dollars apiece. By a compromise effected in the contest of the will. Mr. Embler succeeded in securing tor his clients the sum of fifteen hundred dollars each. We congratulate Mr. Embler on his success, and all parties upon the amicable adjustment of the contest.

We are pleased to be able to announce that the two plays "Ici on Parle Français" and "Who Speaks First?"—the latter of which has been substituted for "Woodcock's Little Game"-are to be given partly for Prof. DePont's benefit. For his indefatiguable labors in drilling the amateurs, taking part in this play, and Iolanthe, and the French play of last June, this is a well deserved compliment. It is now proposed to have the plays given the 11th or 12th of April, and one of the attractions of the evening will be a ballet divertissement like the one given at "On the Boards."

The temperance men met in ward caucuses Monday night and put in nomination the following city officers: First ward-Alderman, E. B. Lewis; constable, Henry Richards. Second ward-Alderman, A.H. Markham; constable, Adney D. Markham. Third ward-Alderman, Thos. Kearns; constable, William Campion. Fourth ward-Alderman, Ambrose Kearney; constable, George Jacobus. Fifth ward-Alderman, Leverett B. Dr. D. O. Farrand, a well-known physician of Detroit, died at his home Sunday morning after a brief sickness. His father was one of the early pioneers of this county and was the first Probate Judge here. The Doctor, who has just died, was born was united in marriage to Miss Myrtie on a farm two miles east of town on the Dixboro road, and in 1851 he was a pupil of Mr. I. N. S. Foster, the present Supervisor of Ann Arbor township. He never was in the University here, as has been falsely reported in the Detroit papers. If he had lived he would have been a prominent witness in the Maclean case, now being tried in Detroit. The classes in Elocution in the High School, at their examination Wednesday afternoon, were treated to something novel in the way of gesture. It may appear early to write of spring preparation ere the breath of Christmas s.cold; but there are so many things to be remembered, and bee-keepers have so little spare time, that a reminder, it may be hoped, will not be considered out of place. Where there will be a poor supply of early natural pollen, as from crocuses, arabis, laurustinus, willows, almonds, box and the like, pea-flour should be provided as a substitute, and vehicles pro vided in which to administer it the bees. Those who propose to give flour-cake instead of simple pea-flour should prepare a quantity at once, and store it in a dry box, for, unlike barley sugar, it will keep without being her-metically sealed, Those who are not supplied with hives, sections, honey-jars, feeders, and the various other desiderata to perfect readiness, should lose no time in arranging for their delivery. Last year a note of warning was given in this regard, but was little heeded, and great disappointment was the result, sections being at a premium. It is a matter worthy of consideration by bee-keepers that many who cater for them have not unlimited capital or space at command, and can neither afford to purchase nor keep a large stock of goods on hand, and that it is really to the advantage of the former to make their wants known Late accounts from California notice the great increase in the size of vine-yards there. A plantation of 200 acres used to be considered a large vineyard; now vineyards of 500 and 600 acres are not uncommon, and one of 1,500 acres was recently planted near Los Angeles.

Some Crawling Leaves.

Harpers Young Folks. When Australia was first discovered by the English, as many strange stories were told about the wonderful things to be found there as we used to hear in the early days of California. Among other things it was said that the leaves of a certain tree had a habit of descending from their proper place and walking along the ground. A party of English sailors had left their ship to roam along the coast and "see what they could see." They were resting under a tree, lying on their backs probably, and naturally gazing upward, when a sudden breeze shook down a number of leaves, which turned somersaults in the air, after the manner of leaves generally, and then floated to the ground. The sailors were surprised at this shower, because it was not the fall of the year, but midsummer, and these falling leaves looked fresh and from which they came, and the amazed sailors started up in terror. They probably knew from experience that people who came in contact with the ground may also expect to come in contact with ous crawling insects, but walking leaves were something altogether out of the common way; and they took to their heels at once, and lost no time in getting on board the vessel. The land was certainly bewitched, and one of the men said, in relating their adventure, that he expected every minute to see the trees step out and dance a regular jig.

Fortunately this singular phenor enon has been fully explained by later travelers who were not too much frightened to stop and examine the matter. It was discovered that these queer leaves are really insects that live upon the trees, and are of the same color as the foliage. They have very thin, flat bodies, and their wings are like large leaves. When anything disturbs them like a breeze, for instance—they fold their legs away under their bodies, and then the leaf-like shape, with stem and all, is com-

Not only are they of a bright green in summer, like the foliage of the trees at that time, but they actually change when the leaves do to the dull brown produced by frost. Another peculiarity of these leaf-insects is that, although they have a generous supply of wings, they seldom use them, but when they have been shaken to the ground, after lying there for a few minutes as if they were really leaves, they crawl toward the tree, and ascend the trunk without seeming to know that they have the power of getting back to their quarters in a much quicker and easier way.

He opened by saying he had no language too strong in which to characterize divorce; "we breathe an atmosphere of moral poison which comes up the register and enters by every crevice. It kills and dries up from the roots the love of virtue, of chastity and of honor." Alluding to divorce figures he said those for the year showed 2,113 for the New England states, a larger ratio in proportion to the population than in France in the days of the revolution. In this small boat the Count and Norah spent the greater part of each evening, rowing about close to the shore, but not venturing farther north than the low promontory or point of land which sheltered the bay on that side. The "Gulnare" lay at anchor in the bay, shifting her position with the tide only, and was visited daily by her owner. I observed one day that the snowy-white sails which she carried on her arrival had been replaced by ethers of a dark brown color, and on asking the Count the reason of the change he replied that he sometimes went on fishing excursions for a week or two in the Mediterranean, and always put aside the white clothing on these occasions, to save war and tear, as it was much more expensive than the dark, and, having to be imported from England, was more difficult to replace. This explanation appeared so satisfactory that I dismissed the subject from my thoughts.

The day of my appointment with Dennis had now come round, and, having requested my host to excuse my absence from that evening's excursion, I repaired to the place of rendezvous, where I found him waiting me. He told me that the 'ould modther' was 'ms frish as a daisy,' and that he had provided for her comfort during the winter. He had not, he said, been as yet on board the yacht, and was awaiting the pinnace, which came ashore every evenng the pinnace, which came ashore every even-ng for water, and would arrive in less than an He had observed the change of canvass,

I told Dennis that for reasons of my own I was anxious to know her destination when she sailed, and having satisfied myself that he could write legibly, I gave him an envelope, with a card and pencil enclosed, and we arranged that in case of the "Gulnare's" sudden departure he should write the name of the port on it, and leave it in a place of concealment. it, and leave it in a place of concea

"Now, Dennis," said I, "when the 'Gulnare' arrives at the port she sails for, if you can manage to go ashore and leave another letter for me at the office of the British consul, to let me know where she has next sailed to, it is just possible that you may do me and our old landlord, the Colonel, a good service, and if nothing comes of it I'll expect to see you always when you come home."

"Long life to yer honor," he replied, "I'll do yer biddin'."

After an evening spent in our customary agreeable manner, as we rose to retire, Colonel De Burgho said,—
"I think, Count, I may expect to receive your papers in a day or two, and, by the way, while I think of it, I see some signs of a change of weather; when the wind blows from the west there is a heavy ground swell in this bay, and I should recommend you to more your yessel in a more

"Well," said the Colonel, "I hope they are right, for if it be otherwise our boating excursion must be discontinued for the present."
The Count and the fishermen were right; during the night the wind shifted to nearly due east, and though there was more sea outside the bay, the latter was as calm as a lake.

the bay, the latter was as calm as a lake.

That afternoon the "Gulnare" lay at her moorings, with her bows toward shore, and her sails, which had been drying all day, loosely flapping to the breeze; towards evening the tide turned and was ebbing rapidly, when I, while on my way to the place where I had met Dennis, saw the "dingy" with the Count and Norah, as usual on board, paddling slowly toward the point on the north of the bay; when nearing it the vinnace put off, and on meeting ward the point on the north of the bay; when nearing it the pinnace put off, and on meeting the "dingy" took it in tow and pulled rapidly for the yacht; I saw Norah carried on deck, and at the same moment heard the "click" of the windlass, and saw the anchor "atrip." I saw them getting the mainsail on her, and the jib stopped out; the foresail was run up, sheets let draw, and the beautiful vessel paid gracefully off, and, rapidly gathering headway, left her moorings under a cloud of canvas. Insher her moorings under a cloud of canvas. I rush-ed to the place of concealment, found the en-velope which Dennis had left, put it unopened into my pocket, and ran at my utmost speed homeward; but before I could reach the Castle the "Gulnare" was rapidly disappearing in the willight gloom.

I sought Colonel De Burgho in the library, and found him opening a large packet, which he said had just arrived by post. "Here, "he said, "are, no doubt, the Count's papers returned, let us see what my "Colonel," I replied, "I grieve to say that a ore urgent matter now requires your instant "Telephone Connection.

I then briefly and rapidly told him what had taken place, and shall never forget the look of blank dismay and despair which overspread his countenance; he groaned aloud, and covering his face with his hands, exclaimed,—

"I have been much to blame, Mervyn, in this business; my affection for Norah, and my desire to gratify her wish, has blinded me to the risk I was incurring in permitting the advances of a total stranger; but this is no time for vain regrets, but for action; what is to be done?"

"The Count, sir," I said, "must be pursued without a moment's delay. I believe I know his destination."

I then opened the gravelene left, by Desired. "I have been much to blame, Mervyn, in this

I could not then tell Colonel De Burgho how deep and intense a feeling had urged me to watchfulness, and simply said,—

"I have endeavoured to do my duty, sir; the safety of any member of your family must be a matter of much concern to me."

"Thank you, Mervyn," he replied; "you have testified by your conduct and activity the warmth of your friendship; but let us examine the dispatch before we determine upon any course; perhaps it may throw some light upon this painful subject."

As I saw that the Colonel, although bearing up against this terrible blow with the manly fortitude of a soldier, was suffering intense anguish, I volunteered to read the dispatch, an offer for which he thanked me heartily. The packet contained the Count's title deeds, and a long letter, which was as follows:

will cause you much anxiety.

"Your friend, Count Albano, is a Count; that is to say, he some two years ago purchased at Rome a patent of nobility, which you are aware is, in this country, granted without much, or any, scrutiny into the antecedents of the applicant. He is the son of a former intendant of the Duke of Medina Sidonia, and was brought up and educated with the Duke's sons, in whose society he no doubt acquired the manner and accomplishments of which you speak. Some eight years ago, when about seventeen, the Duke's interest procured for him a commission in the Italian navy, in which he served for three years, and was then cashiered for complicity in a duel, to which was attached suspicion of foul play. His father dying about this time, he became possessed of a considerable sum of money, with part of which he purchased the yacht you mention, and equipped her at a large expense. She is considered, and indeed has proved herself to be the fastest sailer in these seas; she carries a small gun at the bow; and is also, I find, fitted for carrying a long stern chaser, which, however, is never mounted when the yacht is on this coast, but is supposed to be shipped and unshipped elsewhere.

"Colonel," said I, "it is my duty to obey your instructions, but I have the strongest repugnance to allowing you to start upon this dangerous mission alone—for dangerous I this dangerous mission alone—for dangerous I fear it will prove. It would, in my opinion, be impossible for any one man to accomplish, unassisted, the rescue of your daughter, and I shall feel deeply grieved if you refuse me the privilege of accompanying you; indeed, to speak the truth, I fear that any injunction laid upon me to remain here would soon be disregarded, as I should feel miserable, and a coward, in staying behind when I felt, as I should daily and nightly feel that you were coward, in saying beand when I lett, as I should daily and nightly feel, that you were incurring danger alone. You will excuse me, Colonel," I continued, "but if you do not grant me the favor of going with you, I will on the spot resign my position as your agent, and shall then be free to volunteer my assistance?"

"You have already, Mervyn, acted so udiciously," said the Colonel, "that I cannot efuse what you ask; and I feel, indeed, that he assistance of a younger man than myself is necessity in this case; therefore we may consider the matter settled.
