ent of Liver, Bowels and Kidneys. SYMPTOMS OF A DISEASED LIVER. SYMPTOMS OF A DISEASED LIVER.

Bad Breath: Pain in the Side, sometimes the pain is felt under the Shoulder-blade, mistaken for Rheumatism; general loss of appetite; Bowels generally costive, sometimes alternating with lax; the head is troubled with pain, is dull and heavy, with considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of leaving undone something which ought to have been done; a slight, dry cough and flushed face is sometimes an attendant, often mistaken for consumption; the patient complains of weariness and debility; nervous, easily startled; feet cold or burning, sometimes a prickly sensation of the skin exists; spirits are low and despondent, and, although satisfied that exercise would be beneficial, yet one can hardly summon up fortitude to try it—in fact, distrusts every romely. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred when but few of them existed, yet examination after death has shown the Liver to have been extensively deranged.

It should be used by all persons, old and young, whenever any of the above symptoms appear.

Persons Traveling or Living in Un-healthy Localities, by taking a dose occasion-ally to keep the Liver in healthy action, will avoid all Malaria, Billious attacks, Dizziness, Nau-tea, Drowsiness, Depression of Spirits, etc. It will invigorate like a glass of wine, but is no in-toxicating beverage.

If You have eaten anything hard of digestion, or feel heavy after meals, or sleep-less at night, take a dose and you will be relieved.

A Railroad Accident. The Detroit express, on the Flint & Pere Marquette railroad, left the track, by reason of a broken rail, three miles south of East Saginaw. Every coach but one was ditched. There being no telegraph station at the point where the accident occurred, nothing is known further than that John Hewitt, engineer, and C. L. Rhodes, fireman, were killed.

Mr. Dix Criticised. In answer to the lament of Dr. Dix of New York that "real women" are dying out, and that the "ideal of an earnest, modest, simple womanhood" is being superseded by a poor substitute made of "vulgarity, heartlessness, froth and chaff," a London, Eng., paper thus criticises the reverend gentleman: That there are many girls in New York, as in London, Paris, and every other center of wealth and luxury, as despicable as those whom Dr. Dix describes, is true enough, and pity 'tis 'tis true. But that this picture of the American girl applies to any more than the mere fringe of the sex we altogether refuse to believe. The worst of it is that Dr. Dix himself and men of that way of thinking are partly answerable for this abnormal development of female folly. Dr. Dix has just been distinguishing himself by heading the opposition—which has unfortunately been successful—to the admission of women to Columbia college. Notwithstanding the success of Newnham and Girton, and of the Woman's Annex at Harvard, it has pleased Dr. Dix and others to denounce the higher education of women as if it were certain to result in the ruin of the sex. Women, in his opinion, ought to regard the love, admiration and happiness of man as the chief end of their being, and a well educated woman, he seems to believe, judging perhaps from his own feelings, would be much less attractive to mankind than her more ignorant sister. It is that kind of teaching which leads directly to the "immolation of the child in society" which Dr. Dix so utterly laments. He would shut them out from all but social ambitions, and an exaggerated devotion to society is the natural result. Almost all the abuses which he assails are due to the lack of the higher and wider education which he resolutely denies. It is in vain for anyone to preach that either man or woman exists solely for the benefit of some one else. Each individual exists also for him or for herself, and marriage ought no more to be the sacrifice of the control of the detectives tends to demonstrate that this place is the central manufactory of explosives and the most important depot of all infernal contrivances in the kingdom. The prisoner Whitehead was arraigned and remanded for whitehead was arraigned and remanded for week. Among the other exciting events of ought no more to be the sacrifice of the woman to the man, as Dr. Dix maintains, than the sacrifice of the man to the woman. It is idle to deplore solid views of marriage when declaiming against the opening of other means of livelihood to woman. It is a somewhat odd notion that if women are as well educated as men they will be less likely to live happily together in married life THE BLACK HAND .- The "Black

Great excitement was occasioned Great excitement was occasioned in Birmingham, England, on the 5th inst. by the discovery of a Fenian nitro-glycerine factory in full operation, with apparatus for preparing and mixing explosive compounds constructed on scientific principles and with all cunning and craft, which clearly showed its inventor to be not only a thorough scholar in chemistry and machinery, but also an adeptfor expedients for avoiding notoriety and preventing discovery. To the surprise of all, parliament made quick work with the anti-explosion act, introduced a few days since, the bill having passed within a few hours after its introduction. The bill provides that the maximum penalty for causing an explosion by which loss of life or property is entailed, shall be life-long servitude. The attempt to cause an explosion, or the making or keeping of explosives with intent to cause an explosion will be punishable by imprisonment for 20 years, and the unlawful making or keeping of explosives under suspicious ctreumstances will be punishable by 14 years' imprisonment. All accessories to such crimes are to be treated as principals. Provision is made in the bill for ordering official inquiries into the crimes specified, for the arrest of absconding witnesses, and for searching for explosives, penalties to be inflicted irrespective of the damage done by the explosives. "The outlook for Irish independence is most hopeful. Every fresh outrage by the home government brings fresh accessions to the ranks. The inhumanity of Great Britain has already brought out pronounced opinions from the leading powers on the continent, and mighty as she is Great Britain must regard these opinions seriously. They have stated clearly this Irish question is no longer a matter interesting England alone. It interests all Europe. The Fremden-blatte, the organ of the Austrian gov-ernment, says in a leading article that he Irish question is now one of Eurobean concern, and that it behooves Europe to stem the democratic tide which has been started in Ireland by the action of the British government as by and by they may find it at their own doors. The principal question in controversy was whether, the bank being insolvent, the claim of the United States for money deposited for the postmaster of Chicago is a preferred claim or not. This court holds that the provisions of the national banking act, section 5326, revised statutes, have the effect of withdrawing national banks that have failed from the class is interesting to read the Governor's opinion of Mr. Frank James, recently imparted to a reporter of the Louisville Commercial. Frank James has no such promise, and no man can gainissued from the postoffice department, thereby annulling the order issued January 12, 1883: Section 371, postal laws and regulations of 1879, is amended so as to read as follows: Postal cards and prepaid letters to be forwarded if requested. B. F. COCKER, D. D., LL. D.

After a strong fight of four months against a complication of diseases, and after it seemed as though he was going to gain his health again, suddenly and with scarcely any warning, the brave spirit of Dr. Cocker left its body Sunday evening at 6:45. For nearly a month he had been able to get up and move about the house, and he had expected in a few days to be able to get out into the open air, provided the weather was pleasant. Friday night he felt himself enough better to make him resolve to do without an attendant at night. Sunday morning the pain in his side left him and he expressed himself as feeling much better. No cause for particular anxiety was seen during the day and at the last moment no one was around but Mrs. Cocker who had no warning whatever of the impending calamity. His life went out as quietly and peacefully as the dying away of a sweet strain of music.

For years he had been troubled with asthma and his lungs never had been strong. So when he overworked himself, as he did last fall he fell an easy prey to pneumonia, bronchitis, and at last upon taking cold there was a congestion; a filling up and collapse of the lungs, resulting in death. His had been an unusually eventful life and full of varied experiences Born in the town of Almondbry, Yorkshire in 1821, his father, who was a local preacher, wished him to join the ministry. He did not do this at once, although at eighteen years of age he preached as a local preacher for a short time, when he went into business, first as a clerk in a mercantile house, afterwards as a manufacturer of woolen goods. In 1850 he went to Australia and engaging actively in business in Tasmania and Melbourne, he acquired some property but lost it in a financial panic. Soon after while on a trading voyage, in a vessel owned by him, as he was coasting along Tahiti and Fiji, he resolved to visit in company with a missionary one of the heathen temples. They were discovered and surrounded by the Cannibals they succeeded in breaking through their which they had come. Being several times nearly shipwrecked and meeting with

In returning to Australia Mr. Cocker but the crew and himself were saved and were conveyed to Sydney. In three months he sailed with his family tor America, but on the voyage they experienced a shock of earthquake and landed at Callao, Peru, proceeding thence via. Panama, New Orleans, the Mississippi and Chicago to Adrian, Michigan, where lived a clergyman who in Australia had once promised to help him.

On the journey from Chicago one of the younger children died and the Doctor entered Michigan as he has often said, "with fifty cents in his pocket and a dead child in his arms." In Adrian the Methodist Presiding Elder Dr. Pilcher became acquainted with him and gave him charge of a church in the small village of Palmyra. From thence his fame and reputation as a preacher rapidly spread and he was called in succession to Adrian, Ypsilanti, Ann Arbor, Adrian and Ann Arbor. In 1869 he was appointed to the Central Church Detroit, in the same year the chair of philoso phy in the University being vacant he accepted it and resigned his pastorate. In the University he was esteemed and loved more perhaps than any other man in Michigan, and many students all over the world will deeply deplore his loss and cherish his memory.

In 1864 he received the degree of M, A from Wesleyan University and D. D. from Indiana Asbury, and ten years later LL D. from Victoria college, Ontario.

No face has been more familiar or be ter known on our streets than that of the beloved Doctor, as he was daily seen driving to and from the University behind the old white-nosed horse. His appearance has been well described as "intellectua and venerable. He was at once unpre tending and striking, nearly six feet high, rather slender, with a strongly marked face, a large, kindly, penetrating, dark eye, the whole countenance indicating an admirable blending of strength and benevolence. His whole life has been marked by a pure childlike faith in God." In the "Shadow of the Rock" he has found rest. Every year as the history of the literary graduating class is written up a vote is taken for the favorite professor, and we believe that for a long time no year has passed without the large majority being for the Doctor. This was so because his kindly heart always drew the students to him whenever they were in trouble. It they had complications with the faculty they knew he would give them a fair hearing and if possible plead for them; if they desired to "look up" on any particular point in philosophy, religion, antiquity or even science he could give them the books of reference, and oftentimes even the number of the page on which it was treated; and when they were troubled with the atheistical sophistries of so-ealled scientific men and books he could always point to a passage in some book or other which would be an antidote for the poison. His large, well-chosen library was always at the disposal of the Doctor's friends, and we have seen his books, without having his name written in them, in as a body to attend the funeral services.

Resolved, That if suitable arrangements can be made it is the desire of the senate that could always be told by the red line interneations and the comments written in his ine clear cut handwriting. He made no ote of the books loaned and his confience was very seldom, if ever abused. To a pure, beautiful and transparent life

e added re.narkable power in the pulpit and as a preacher was uniformly successful. All classes of people flocked to hear him and were alike enthusiastic in praise of is wonderful powers. THE FUNERAL. Wednesday was a cold, raw day, yet here was such an attendance at the funeral services in the church and at the cemeery as has not been seen here for many years. At one o'clock the particular friends of the family and those students who have peen in the classes of Doctor Cocker asembled at the house, and after a briefservice followed the body to the Methodist Arriving there the front hall which had been reserved, was filled by hose who came in the procession. The nterior of the church was richly decorated with heavy black drapery extending up over the arch in front of the organ and overing the altar. In front of the pulpit, standing out in relief against the sombr back-ground was the white marble baptismal fount surmounted by a handsom arge cross of white and yellow roses and es. At the left of this, on a table rested large pillow presented by his students. It was of white roses, calla lillies, sweet elysium and with "U. of M." in carnaons. There were other beautiful pieces of flowers, from friends in the city, Detroit and Chicago.

The services were commenced with a ymn, followed by a prayer by Rev. L. R. Fiske, the reading of a chapter by Rev. S. Haskell, a voluntary by the choir, and ome remarks by Pres. Angell who spoke in the name of the University, of the connection the deceased sustained to the institution, to the faculties and the students. who resolved upon sacrificing them. The packsuffered shipwreck off the island of Tonga, sed house was bushed in silence and the white handkerchiefs everywhere visible testified to the deep grief of those present as the speaker bade farewell to the beloved remains. The coffin was borne to the hearse by the pall bearers-Profs. Frieze and Payne, Dr. J. M. Arnold, Rev. I. N. Elwood, and Mr. C. H. Worden and Mr. John Ferdon, -and it was preceded to the cemetery by n escort of several hundred students in ine. The short burial service was read and the body was then consigned to its inal resting place.

Among those from abroad present at he funeral we noticed Rev. Arthur Edwards, of Chicago; Regent Geo. Duffield, of Lansing; Pres. L. R. Fiske, of Albion; Dr. Rynd, of Adrian ; Rev. T. C. Gardner, of Port Huron; Revs. Washburne and C. T. Allen, of Detroit; Rev. Wm. George, of Dexter; Rev. I. N. Elwood, of Ypsilanti; Rev. Atkinson and J. W. Campbell, of Adrian.

Of the ministers who, at Adrian, received Dr. Cocker into Michigan and the M. E. Church one only survives in active life. Dr. Pilcher who was Presiding Elder then is superannuated. Dr. Perrine who was astor there has gone over the River, and Dr. T. C. Gardner of Port Huron, only survives. The Dr. was Bible agent at Adrian at the time Dr. Cocker came here. He now lives at Port Huron, and we were leased to see him amongst the mourners the funeral Wednesday. Also Mrs. Sears of Adrian, at whose father's house Dr. Cocker first made his home.

THE LATE PROFESSOR COCKER. Mr. D. Bethune Duffield, after some appropriate remarks, introduced the folwing resolutions, which were supported by Dr. Baker, and unanimously adopted by a standing vote of the Presbytery:

The Presbytery of Detroit appreciating the high character, profound learning, large influence and great usefulness of Dr. Benjamin F. Cocker, Professor of Mental and Moral Philosophy for the past fourteen years in the University of Michigan, take this occasion to express their sympathy with the University, and the sister denomination with which he was more directly connected, over the great loss which sound iearning, Christian philosophy and exemplary piety sustain in his death; and our prayer is that a successor equally learned and as supremely devoted to the cause of truth and righteousness, may be speedily found for the vacant chair which he so long, so ably, and so acceptably filled.

The case of Maclean vs. the News was losed by the attorneys Tuesday forenoon and the jury were charged and sent out. After a delay of about seven hours they returned with the astounding verdict of $20,000 damages for the plaintiff. When the news reached here not even Maclean's friends could believe it true. They exected some damages, but they were not prepared for so high a figure. Of course here was great rejoicing on the part of he medical students, and it was at once proposed to have a big time. However, to the credit of the Doctor, it may be said. when he heard of it, he at once wrote a etter asking them to refrain from any demonstrations on account of the recent death of Dr. Cocker. Washington Letter

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 5, 1883. Every day of the week, except Sunday, President Arthur devotes the hour from 1 intil 2 o'clock p. m. to the reception of mofficial callers. They are received in he library of the White House, a long and oval shaped room where the cabinet meetngs are held. His business callers seat nemselves in a line around this room. The President first shakes hands with the people who have come to pay him merely heir respects, then he walks about and talks to his business callers, but sits down with no one. He has a business like way of dealing with his callers, and devotes his ntire attention for the minute to the person addressed. He has no time for indirect words, still there is no difficulty in securing an interview with him by anyone vito has any real business to transact. On hese occasions he always wears a dark ousiness suit, the only color he allows imself being a red rose in his button

An elaborate program for their entertainment is being carried out, though some formal attentions that were to have been shown them have been omitted out of respect to the deceased Cabinet Minister. These distinguished visitors show much interest in seeing the sights of the city. General Diaz is a man of strong characteristics, with a soldierly appearance, erect form and manly carriage. He speaks but little English, while his wife, in attractive woman not more than 18 years old, speaks it fluently. Representative S. S. Cox, of New York. is in Washington, and is working earnesty to secure the Speakership of the next House He says active movements are in progress for him, and he expects to enter the race with the united vote of the delegation from his own State, excepting the support of Mr. Abram Hewitt.

Ubiquitous Governor Butler of Massachusetts, is in the city looking after his financial interests. His title deed to the ground on Capitol Hill on which stands the large pile of granite erected by him is being disputed by some recently discovered claimants.

On Wednesday the President, returning from his usual evening drive, stopped at a book-store to look up some reading matter with which to beguile the tedium of his long southern journey. Before he could step from his carriage to the door he was observed, and in a few minutes a crowd gathered and blockaded the sidewalk to the extent of compelling passersby to take the middle of the street, and he services of a policeman was required to prevent the crowd from invading the tere. Truly, greatness and distinguished osition are subjected to ordeals terribly trying to a satiated appettie. I do not vonder that the President pants for a ittle obscurity, for the depths of some vast vilderness, and is betaking himself to the lense shade of the Florida orange groves. And yet, if he is still an object of curious spection in Washington where Presients have always lived, moved and had heir being, what may be expected to renain of him on his return from his trip to the far south, where the natives have no conception of a real live President? Think of the excruciations in store for nim during the next few weeks, when ven for some time past he has been sickening and turning livid at the sound of the airs "Hail to the Chief" and "See the onquering Hero comes." He left the ity Thursday morning at 11.50 o'clock, on a special train, accompanied by Secetary Chandler, Mr. Miller of New York, and Private Secretary Phillips, and many kind wishes that his journey might be pleasant and his fishing good.

Before his departure he named the new Cabinet Officers, Judge Walter Q. Gresham of Indiana. The appointment is exremely well received in Washington. Judge Gresham has the reputation of beng a man of decided force of character and has been mentioned for positions of the highest prominence for years. Senator Jones of Nevada positively denies that there is any foundation for the rumor that he has had a disagreement with President Arthur, or that he expressed himself as having made his last visit to the White House. He further says his relations with the President were never kindlier or warmer than at the present time.

On Tuesday, the close of Mr. Merrick's cross-examination of Ex Senator Dorsey, marked an epoch in the star route trial In spite of Mr. Dorsey's evasions, convenient memory, and partial blindness, Mr. Merrick succeeded in extracting from him some important admissions for the Government. It is claimed by the prosecution that Dorsey was the instigator and organizer of the conspiracy, and the ross-examination developed a good deal in support of this theory. It has shown that Dorsey furnished the money out of his own pocket to start and equip the combination. The headquarters were in his own residence on I street, and he personally watched and directed the preparation of bids. In carrying ont the scheme he had devised, he sent to postmasters whose continuance in office largely depended upon him, even if they did not owe their original appointment to him, certain bonds, in blank, with the request that they procure sureties and certify to them, without even knowing the character of the bonds. In one case at least a postmaster indignantly refused to compromise his honor, even at the request of a U. S. Senator who might be able to put him out of office.

The State Board of Charities and Corrections has offered the following suggestions, relative to the extension of State Hospital care for children at Michigan University, for action of the Legislature in amendment of present laws: "The Legislature has humanely provided that any dependent children who are inmates of the State Public School at Coldwater or who, if not affected by disease or requiring surgical treatment, would be entitled to admission to said in stitution, may be sent to the hospital at Ann Arbor, "the expenses of conveying them, and their board and nursing and other care in said hospital" being paid out of the State treasury. Act No. 138, Public Acts 1881. The Board respectfully recommend the extension of the same privileges and rights to the children who may need such medical and surgical treatment in the State Reform School, and the Reform School for girls, the School for the Blind and the Institution for the education of the Deaf and Dumb. The provision for this class of patients, by special wards to be built at the University hospitals, is of great importance to the full and successful execution of the law, and will commend itself to the favorable consideration of the Legislature. They also take this opportunity of soliciting the attention of the Legislature to some provision of law that may place at least the surgical skill in our schools of medicine connected with the University, within reach of persons who might thus cease to be dependent upon public charity. NORA'S PERIL.

CHAPTER X.

Early next forenoon we embarked as arrang ed on board the fishing-boats, and sailed slowly along the coast, passing the port of Angistri without landing, our object being to avoid any of the Count's crew who might be natives of that place. As we approached the headland I kept a sharp look out for the "Gulnare," which Beppo had informed us was always moored not far from the tower; and I was rewarded by seeing her tapering masts overtopwarded by seeing her tapering masts overtop-ping a jutting rock, behind which she lay in a land-locked creek, almost invisible from any pursuing vessel; her sails had been removed, and we were safe from pursuit, so far as she was concerned, could we only rescue Norah and convey her in safety on board the "Art-adne".

We set our nets and lines in the bay, as other boatmen were doing, and then rowed slowly toward the beach, close under the headland. toward the beach, close under the headland. Our costumes were a perfect disguise, and at a short distance we were not distinguishable from the fisherman on the shore. As pre-arranged, Dennis, the two yachtsman, and I, landed and wandered carelessly about under the cliff. At length I espled a pathway which I had no doubt was the means of approach to the tower, as on one side there was stretched a rope tower, as on one side there was stretched a rope made of the green fibers of the vine, for the assistance of those who mounted its steep ascent. In a small sandy cave, I observed the "Gulnare's" cable, or "'dingy," hauled up, and this left no coubt in my mind that this pathway was the Count's mode of access to the tower, and means of communication with his yacht. Beckoning silently to my companions to follow me, we cautiously ascended the pathway, which took a larger genuse upward now and again Beckning silently to my companions to follow me, we cautiously ascended the pathway, which took a zigzag course upward, now and again resting ourselves to recover our breath, and reconnoitre our advance; we occasionally perceiving at some turn in the path, the two fishing boats near the beach, and saw that our friends were anxiously watching our progress; when we had nearly reached the summit the path widened out, and we calculated that we must be close to the tower, and just beneath it. I looked stealthily over the cliff, and saw that it overhung the sea at that place, and was apparently about one hundred and fifty feet from the water; on cautiously looking round a jutting point, I saw a small alcove excavated in the face of the rock, and a rustic bench fitted into it, capable of seating several persons. The rock in front had been cut away, and rose gently towards the top of the cliff; the space in front of the alcove being covered with a short marine grass, of a very dry and slippery nature. Observing this, I took off my shoes, and signalled to my companions to do the same, being aware of the advantage it would give us in any personal encounter. The view from this spot was magnificent; below us lay the blue sea, covered with numberless tiny sails, and boats of every size engaged in fishing; in the distance we could see the promontory of Methana, the island of Epidauros, and the Gulf of Dora, over which the white-winged craft glittered in the powerful sunbeams. We could see the pinnace scudding about to the no rard and just keeping the headland in view, as we had arranged. I felt convinced that after midday, the alcove being in shade, it would be visited by the Count and Norah, and whispered to my companions that I would not ascend farther at present, as I had no doubt that this was a piace of daily resort by the inhabitants of the tower.

We sat down on the margin of the pathway, and waited patiently for nearly an hour, examining our arms and conversing in whispers. Suddenly my ear caught the sound of voices nearly overhead, and, listening intently, I was satisfied that they were approaching our place of concealment. I told Dennis to remain with me, and instructed the yachtsmen, should the lady be rescued, to convey ber at once to the boats, and signal to the pinnace. The Colonel and Lieutenant Bakhus were, I knew, well armed, and could defend themselves against probable attack until assistance reached them; though the provided for, I did not doubt that Dennis and I could hold the pass against an equal number of assailants, and eventually make good our retreat. I had scarcely completely these arrangements, and was listening in breathless suspense, when I heard yards; and, peering cautiously round the nook, observed them taking their seats in the alcove. The air was still, and every word spoken was distinctly heard by me. "Norah," said the Count. "why will you not work and the count." distinctly heard by me.
"Norah," said the Count, "why will you not yield to my wishes? Why will you not be my wife?"

"Count Albano, she replied, in a mournful voice, "there was a time when you possessed my whole heart, but you have forfeited my love and respect by your treacherous and disgraceful treament of my dear father; but, quite irrespective of that, he has my solemn pledge that I will never marry without his approval; it is impossible now that he could consent to our unlon, and the only atonement you can make for your breach of honor to him, and your disregard of my feelings, is to restore me to his care at once."

"Beloved Norah." said the count, "what you ask is impossible. I cannot relinquish you now; even if I were willing, my yacht is laid up, and my crew dispersed, and for some weeks it would be impossible to recall them; you can not remain the inmate of this tower for weeks, not remain the inmate of this tower for weeks, with no female companion, and you have no prospect of escape; there is but one course open to you—become my wife, and at once."

"I have told you, Count, my firm determination not to yield to your unmanly importunities. I will never become the wife of any man whom I cannot respect; cease, therefore, to persecute me, as you have daily done since you hore me away from my home. I repeat that bore me away from my home. I repeat that were I to submit to your wishes, life would become unbearable to me, and I should die the vletim of remorse and shame. Oh my dear father! my dear father! would that you were here!"

The Count laughed in that mocking tone I have previously described, and said,—
"Well Signora, I will give you one day more to consider and relent, and if you do not, you will clearly understand that on the following day you shall be my wife, whether you consent or not."

"Then you will understand sir," she said, "that, sooner than submit to such degredation, I will jump over this cliff and put an end to my wretched existence. Oh, my father! Inv dear father! I will be true to you," she cried. "Beware, wretch, how you provoke his venge-

Again the same mocking laugh was heard.

A moment after, she exclaimed,— "Stand off,
sir, I command you." sir, I command you."

I could restrain myself no longer. Beckoning to my companions, and rushing round the corner of the rock, I shouted,—
"Norah, your father is at hand, fly,—fly!"
"Oh, Arthur! save me, save me!" she exclaimed, and ran towards me with extended arms.

"To the boat,—to the boat!" I cried, and delivered her to the care of the yechtsmen, who quickly disappeared with their charge. The Count, glaring upon me with malignant eyes, drew from his vest a silver whistle, which he blew loudly, and then rushed upon me, drawing a small dagger from his breast. I had loosened my cutlass in its sheath, and was about to draw it, when suddenly recollecting the Count's repugnance to a straight hit out from the shoulder, I shut my fist, and went right at his eyes. He, as formerly, threw himself back, ducked to evade the blow, and in so doing, slipped on the burnt-up grass, and fell upon his back. I was upon him in an instant, and had seized his wrist with a grasp of iron, while with my right hand I clutched his throat with a grip which he vainly struggled to escape from. I did not wish to take his life, but merely to render him insensble, and bind him; but his struggles were so violent that I but merely to render him insensble, and bind him; but his struggles were so violent that I was obliged to use all my strength to keep him down. I heard a scuffle in the rear, which suddenly ceased, and at the same time my throat was grasped from behind by two powerful hands, and though I never for a moment relaxed my own grasp upon the Count, I was quickly becoming insensible. I suddenly fett a relief, and looking round, perceived Dennis brandishing a cutlass, and heard him exclaim.—

"Bedad that settles old scores, I'm think-I rose to my feet, the Count being now perfeetly insensible, and saw, quite dead as I supposed, the mate of the "Gulnare" lying on the sward, with a fearful gash on his head, inflicted by Dennis. I questioned him as to what had happened after I had commenced my personal struggle with Count Albano, and he said that when the latter blew his whistle, and attacked me, the Malay youth, who was the Count's tow, the Colonel and Lieutenent Bakhus having resolved not to dismiss the fishermen until we arrived at the yacht. Norah threw herself into her father's arms, and both remained silent and motionless until we boarded the "Ariadne," when they descended to the cabin, and no doubt gave vent to the intensity of their joy at being so happily reunited. We at once weighed anchor and sailed for Poros, where we landed Beppo, well satisfied with the liberal gift Colonel De Burgho placed in his not unwilling hand. i ha tal en the precaution of telling Dennis that should the Colonel or Norah interrogate him as to the fate of the Count, he was to say that when we retreated we had left him insen-sible, but unwounded. In fact, I did not know sible, but unwounded. In fact, I did not know whether he was dead or merely in a swoon when I relaxed my hold, but inclined to the latter opinion; not so Bennis.

"Instnsible is it," said he; "begorra it'll be hard to 'insinse' him intil anything for some time, Mr. Mervyn; it's me opinion he'll maybe give no more throuble in this world, after the sqazing ye guv him; but we don't know that he's did, for sartin; and we'll give him the binifit o'the doubt. av it makes the Colonel an' he's did, for sartin; and we'll give him the bili-ifit o' the doubt, av it makes the Colonel an' the lady asier in their moinds. "That's it, Dennis," I replied, "it would shock her feelings to know that his death, if he is dead, was so sudden, and, as she would naturally conclude, by my hand. It will be sufficient to say that he was severely stunned by a fall in a personal struggle with me."

We directed our course to Corfu, the Lieutenant being fully bent on shipping stores at that port, and conveying the Colonel and Norah to their home. They came on deck next morning, their home. They came on deck next morning, when Lieutenant Bakhus was formally introduced to Norah, who said that her father had informed her of his great kindness in placing the yacht at his disposal without which timely aid, he had also told her, all efforts would have proved fruitless.

"Guess yer governor, miss, was pretty well treed to be sure, when I had the pleasure of meeting him; but for whatever assistance I have had the good fortune to render. I am fully

"Arthur," said Norah, "in my selfish joy at meeting my dear father yesterday I quite forgot to thank you for your watchful care of him, and your anxiety on my behalf, and the him, and your anxiety on my behalf, and the great courage you evinced in effecting my escape. You are scarcely aware of the danger you encountered, for Count Albano was surrounded by a numerous and desperate band of adventurers; and had he been able to summon them to his aid, I shudder to think that you could hardly have escaped with your life, and that my fate would have been sealed; for I learned during my short stay at the tower, that the island is exclusively inhabited by pirates and rovers of the most reckless character, of whom he is the acknowledged leader. Fortunately, your plans were laid and carried out with the most consummate skill, and you were favored by the temporary dispersion of his crew. At any other time of the year your enterprise would have been most hazardous; believe me, Arthur, that I shall never forest year kind scileture and noble offerts. ous; believe me, Arthur, that I shall never forget your kind solicitude and noble efforts to effect my rescue; to you and my friend, Lieutenant Bakhus, I give my most heartfelt thanks, and bless the good Providence that sent you to my aid."

Who could adequately describe the joy of Norah and Kathleen on their happy reunion? One letter alone, despatched by me from Genoa, had reached the latter, and she had been enduring the most anxious apprehension for our safety. Colonel De Burgho pressed the Lieutenant to remain for at least a week, and share unrejoicings; but that gallant officer pleaded his inability to absent himself any longer from duty, and sailed for Genoa on the next day, pledging himself to return and visit the castle during the following summer, and to bring his friend, Mr. Milner, the owner of the "Ariadne," to whom the Colonel requested him to convey his grateful thanks.

Colonel De Burgho liberally rewarded the crew of the "Ariadne," and took Dennis into his service as "commodore of his marine," who soon proved himself to be a valuable addition to his establishment.

The autumn and winter months passed away imperceptibly, as time always does with those who are actively employed. I did not venture to press my suit, feeling that it would be indelicate towards Norah to do so. But our intimacy gradually increased, and I knew that my affection would, in due course of time, be reciprocated. I mentioned my hopes to her father and said,—

"Nothing, Arthur, would give me greater appriness" your courses saved her feather and said,—

"Nothing, Arthur, would give me greater happiness; your courage saved her from a fate too awful to contemplate. She must feel deep gratitude to you, and naturally that sentiment will ripen into love; do not feel discouraged that she does not demonstrate that feeling just yet; you must consider the shock to her sensibilities from the conduct of one who, we lave all agreed, shall be in future nameless. But if you can win her, you have my full consent."

I hided my time, and reaped my reward.

He treated them as almost human and creature with which he came in contact He treated them as almost human, and I bided my time, and reaped my reward; when the summer arrived, and we resumed our boating and walking excursions, my suit made rapid progress. One lovely evening, as we were seated side by side on the fallen tree on which the Colonel and I had rested when he imparted to me the story of the Count's lovesuit, I ventured to express my hopes in language which I shall not here repeat, but which came from my heart. She remained silent for some time, and at length, looking up with an earnest and imploring gaze, said,— Alexander Stephens always occupied the chamber which opened into this. A step on the porch would raise a terrible howling, and it would have been indeed

Mr. Stephens' constant companion. He loved him as an intimate friend, and when he died he shed tears over his grave. Rio was a remarkable dog. He could reason more than any animal I have ever known. I remember at Liberty Hall we would be talking about have ever known. I remember at Lib-erty Hall we would be talking about "Then, Arthur," she said, "my happiness—our happiness—will be without alloy. My dear father approves of our union, and nothing remains—"."

He seemed to understand language, and his face was very much like that of a human. He was a big, fat poodle, with wool as white as snow, as heavy as that of a sheep, and as soft as silk. He had a high forehead and bright, black eyes. He grew blind several years before he died, and Mr. Stephens took as much care of him as he would have done had he been his own flesh and blood. When he died he put him in a wooden coffin and buried him in the garden. He had intended to have erected a marble slab over his grave, but this was put off and finally neglected. He never cast off any of his dogs in their old age, and Troup, Pluck, Frank and half a dozen others of his

Looking off unto Jesus, my eyes cannot see The troubles and dangers that throng about They cannot be blinded with sorrowful tears, They cannot be shadowed with unbelief?

Looking off unto Jesus, my spirit is blest; In the world I have turmoil, in him I have rest. The sea of my life all around me may roar, When I look unto Jesus I hear it no more.

Looking off unto Jesus, I go not astray; My eyes are upon him, he shows me the way. The path may seem dark as he leads me along But following Jesus I cannot go wrong.
