THE AVENGER.

A Tale of the Woods of Maine. BY CHARLES P. ISLEY.

CHAP. I.

The scene to which we would direct the attention of the reader is one we delight to contemplate—a dense forest, in summer time, through the deep foliage of the broad overhanging branches, the sunbeams fall with a chastened and grateful light.

From perch to perch the tiny bird passes; and you clear spring that, 'midst its herbs, well-soiled forth and visits the strong roots of the all good it does.

Seated on a small knoll, covered with a velvet-like moss, besides the stream, was a gaunt figure whose dress and equipments proclaimed him to be a hunter.

At the time of his introduction to the reader he was making his morning's meal of dried hickory nuts, and his eyes were washed down by the crystal water that trickled by his side, and from the zest with which he applied himself to the task, there could be no doubt that he was a man of his word.

"A fresh bite of ven's nose wouldn't go bad this morn'g," he muttered in soliloquy, as he vainly endeavored to tear asunder a tough sinewy morsel he held in his hand.

Early in the forenoon a messenger was despatched to Falmouth with the mountain tidings, and a company of men—armed with rifles and swords—of an Indian fighter in his way—was immediately sent to the scene of action.

At that period every settlement had its 'Block House,' so called—a large building composed of huge logs, and barricaded like a garrison. Into these in dangerous times the settlers would flock for refuge, and frequently with in these crowded quarters they were compelled to remain for years—never venturing out, unless with extreme caution, and always taking care to go completely armed.

THE HIBERNIAN CLUB.

Kalamazoo Waking up—the Irish Gentlemen of that City organizing. From the Kalamazoo Sunday Herald.

The Hibernian Club, having organized, met for the first time at their club rooms on Main street, last Sunday.

There was no definite object in view to be accomplished by the organization, and according to the prominent members, before the meeting was called to order, they were quite likely to be dissolved.

Mr. O'Connell rose from his seat where he had been vigorously repairing an old pipe which had every indication of being an antique, and said: "Gentlemen, I don't desire in the least to interfere with Patrick Murphy's wife."

"Mr. President," spoke up Mr. Flaherty, "I would like to see if there is anything the constitution that speaks up the business that this club will prosper."

"Mr. President, it is not meself that is out of order, for I'm falling as good as dead over my wife."
