AN OLD BOY'S REVERY.

BY HENRY E. BURTON

From The Current. A holiday! What an uproarous welcome I should have given it once; but to-day I sedately followed the treadmill routine of my daily life, and wandered into my office, sat down at my desk, and wrote a few letters, then idly studied the signs over the way, and wondered about all the things men wonder about when they are unoccupied and lonesome and worried and perhaps much saddened by their everyday life.

Gradually, out of the swift, sharp, glaring present, I drifted into a grateful, misty way of reflection and reminiscence, still accompanied by some wonderments and worries, of course-veritable things at the start, but merging into shades, and finally only shadows. And the way was lit by faces and presences, and was sweet with voices of the past, more and more, until I came, suddenly and with a pleased recognition, upon my funny old patched trousers of thirty years ago.

They were boy's trousers, for I was a boy in their time; and rather suspect, notwithstanding gray hair and wrinkles, that I have never fully grown up yet But anybody would have known them for a boy's, for, though they were old enough for a man, and neatly repaired here and there with cotton thread, and bits of not entirely harmonious color, they were short in the legs, small in the waist, and spotted up and down and across with smuts of boyish thoughtlessness and improvidence. Suspender buttons were missing, in which last respect however, they are like my contemporaneous trousers, but, again very unlike, for a frugal mother's patient, loving care shines in every strong stitch of the old patches, big and little! What a world of woman's wit and mother-love there is in boy's patched trousers! No wonder his legs do not weary in them. I think mine would be new legs if they could be squeezed into that old vesture again.

Somehow, without agency of mine, in an entirely spontaneous way, all my forty odd years came together, in inquiring, sympathetic concert about the little old garment. I was among them and of them all. They all knew me, and every year's face was a multitude. Each was like that mountain over there to the west, that you watch from sunrise till after sunset on some warm vacation day. It is always the same mountain, you know, and its faithful heart throbs to the tips of the summit pines, while the high heavens and low valleys creep down and up its sides:-yes, and mingle sometimes like memories of now and long ago. I suppose all my years were there because I was. One's years are faithful. They never desert him when friends and fortune go. They run ahead of him and lie in wait in every present day. The years of those trousers attend me, I find to this day, as Virgil says Iulus followed Æneas "non passibus æquis." And, like Virgil's hero, I could not leave them if I would, and would not if I could.

Indeed I surmise that I am founded on those trousers. These late years have brought me a deal of trouble and tribulation; but through it all I have felt a certain sturdy independence which is full brother to the feeling that I came to have in those trousers and about them, at the last. They annoyed and humiliated my inexperienced heart a good deal when they had been considerably spotted in my play and torn in my fights, and were much subjected to the frequent needle. But, long before I outgrew them I came to think trousers were not of much consequence, and had reached the conviction that not clothes but the fellow in them was what the other fellows must fight. I perceived that a boy almost devoid of lothes could give what seemed to me the their inmates. From that day to this I have never been able to think of useful people in connection with their clothes. I think I have heard somebody say that Gladstone's trousers are a sight to be seen; but, good heavens, the observer must have passed his life in the contemplation of fashion plates! Whoever halted to inquire about the cut and material of Cromwell's leg furniture? We know on good authority that Frederick the Great had not a decent shirt to be laid out in; but till he was dead nobody thought of his shirt, and after his death even a deficiency in that respect was worthy of mention. Nelson's clothes at Trafalgar were probably not very shapely (orders and decorations are not clothes) and were doubtless much the worse for wind and storm; but they were good enough for a hero to die in, and England's grief and glory have never inventoried his wardrobe. History is signally deficient in detailed accounts of millinery; when it has a strong man or woman to tell about it forgets all that. Indeed anybody who could tell much about clothes could not tell much about men and women, big or little. I am an obscure person, but I should think I have known some men not famous, and some who are more or less famous, as great in their hearts as Nelson or Cromwell, whose trousers, for rents, stains and patches, were worthy of any hero. There is a great deal of millinery in the world, of many sorts. It is not all on and tear as they did, but full of pluck, his official household-ought to be comclined to think that I am still a boy when I remember him, for he had a boy's enthusiasm, faith and vim to the last. they told me, as never before, what faithful economy he must have practiced to clothe me at all; but I am inclined to think it was especially because they took garded as commercial officers only, and stages of the debate the circumstance me back to the long walks and drives with him, when he used to tell me stories and quote poetry, and talk against slavery, and fill me up with those ideas and impulses which carried me into the army when the time came, ten years later.

And now I think of it, that war was fought out and won mostly by men whose fathers were poor, and whose trousers were patched when they were boys. While lingering there with my years and so many of their people-some with whom I might speak to-day if I could meet them, and others with whom I can never talk again till they have taught me the language of the oldest but leastknown of countries-the significance of old clothes took a fresh hold upon me. What volumes of prose and poetry, of experience, advonture, and even great history there is in them for him who wore them, and for those who knew the wearer! They go more surely and more swiftly to the heart and brain than any printed and fresh tears, in all their woof! From the worn shes of the baby who shell to the sea

A man lustrious service it represents and the who carried a musket when the war began and wore the stars of a major-general at its close, and who has served his state with honor and renown in almost all its great offices, told me, a few years ago, cleanse it of the agents of the Indian ring, that he could not bear to part with even | the Pension ring, and the Land ring; and the trousers he wore in the line, to say it would then be possible only for honest nothing of the coat he came home in.

The truth is I could not tell much more without crying, and commissioners upon the ground of and I am too old to cry now, at least in their fitness by character and ability to public. But I am not sure that I lost much by staying away from the church | their several communities; and the counservice to which I was invited, by that try would no longer be scandalized by the deep-voiced bell, in the midst of my rev- prosecution of unworthy officials who ery. Crime in China and Its Punishment.

Crime does not go unpunished in this part of China. The professional guide of the city, indeed, shows the execution ground of Canton with an honest pride. It is not a pleasant place to look at on a wet morning, and to a criminal must have a very depressing appearance. Yet, with the exception of three or four wooden crosses leaning up against the wall, there was nothing to indicate that the scene had ever been one of wholesale butchery. Still here it was that, in 1855, nearly fifty thousand so-called rebels were beheaded. My idea that an exesution was about to take was now confirmed by the owner of the hut coming for his knife. about to take place, for he looked very melancholy, though I afterward learned that some opium had been given him. As the executioner came up a couple of policemen pushed the victim down upon legs to his arms as he knelt, then pulling back the collar of his shirt forced his head forward, while the executioner with much care selected an earthen pot in which to catch the prisoner's skull. These preliminaries having been settled the headsman stood over the prisoner and with two cuts completely severed the neck—one, indeed, had put the criminal beyond all pain. The head, which had fallen into the pot, was covered up, the bleeding trunk was picked up by the relatives of the convict, the crowd separated, and after some financial transactions between the officer who superintended the execution and the executioneer, the latter walked off to his hut, for all was over; the whole affair not having occupied ten minutes. I was told that just then executions took place at about the rate of one a day. Generally they took the form of beheadings, out occasionally people were submitted to the slow death upon the crosses against the wall, when, of course the spectacle was more barbar ous. A woman was executed the next day for killing her husband, and received eight wounds from the knife of the executioner before she was finally put out of her agony; but I could not find that hers was a frequent case, nor now generally resolves itself into some such mode of despatch.—Canton Cor. How Hungarians Work in Pennsylvania.

The importation of Hungarian laborers in large numbers by the proprietors of the large coke works in and around Uniontown has produced a great deal of dissatisfaction among native miners and laborers. There are now in the neighborhood of two thousand in the whole

So far they have only attempted the commonest kind of labor, such as drawing coke and digging coal in the former cars," which consists in throwing the finished product of the ovens into the railroad cars. The women assist the men and do fully as much work. You see them everywhere at work among the culiar dress making them everywhere distinguishable. While at work they wear a little coarse shawl thrown over the head, concealing all save a patch of dark skin and a pair of small, bright eyes. A man's coat, with the arms cut off, frequently adorns the arms and body, while a short, thick woolen or flannel petticoat completes the toilet to the knees, where it is met by a pair of men's top boots. Armed with a steel prong fork, a woman will fill a box or open car with coke in something over five hours, for which her husband or the man she works for, receives $1.50. the shawl off her head, she trudges to "pot," for nearly everything these Hungarian laborers eat is boiled in this "pot," which most of them bring with them from Hungary. It has been alleged by the enemies of these people tion now in session in this city, Fred that they are very promiscuous in their habits, but this is not generally believed. There are nearly as many women as men among them. In respect to the economy and frugality they display in their mode of life they greatly resemble the Chinese. One of their number will walk miles, if necessary, to a butcher's shop and carry off, with many expressions of regard and delight, the offal and refuse butcher shops and slaughter-houses. They cook these in the "pot," together with water and beans. This, with bread or crackers, make up nearly their whole diet. Out of a pay of forty dollars in money, the balance being consumed in store orders. There has been some improvement among them since they have been here. The women wear longer dresses and cleaner ones than at first. Many of them wear shoes now instead of boots, and although the men still drink whisky they drink it at home in their houses and not on the streets. They come here among the very lowest of the population of Southern Europe and probably the offspring of serfs or slaves. They look on every well-dressed man they see upon their arrival as a lord or prince. One of the paymasters here said that a number of them tried to kiss his hand when he first paid them. All of them save the money they make and many of them send it back to Hungary to bring over their friends and kindred.—Harrisburg (Pa.) Patriot.

topic. It lasted two weeks and was a success, our fortune being to see "Hamlet" and "Mefistofele." Both evenings the immense Music Hall was nearly filled and good seats brought high premiums, but it was at the latter performance where enthusiasm reigned, for it was a Nilsson night, and the "Queen of Song" never appeared with greater triumph. The audience applauded themselves tired, and the fair songstress favored with repeated encores. In music she certainly reigns facile princeps. Even above the combined din of orchestra, chorus and large organ, her voice floated pure and clear. In Mefistofele she was the Margherita and the Helen, and she was admirably fitted for per cent., and the Company is only eight those difficult rôles, not only as concerns voice, but also for presence and dramatic

You will remember, also, that "Dr. Sevier," now running in The Century, is by the same writer. It only recently occurred to Mr. Cable to enter the field as a lecturer and reader, giving selections in public from his own works. His success on his first appearremarkable indeed. There was of course great curiosity to see a much-talked-of author of some very charming stories, but Mr. Cable from the first scored a success in this new field. "No one since Dickens," said The Transcript, "has succeeded in so holding an audience breathless, while every emotion and sympathy was played upon." In addition to the fact that Mr. Cable is a fine reader, etc., he should have a large audience by way of giving the Bicycle Club a boom in their preparations for the coming Bicycle Tour-

SCROFULA.

A remedy that can destroy the germs of scrofula, and when once settled has the power to root it out, must be appreciated by those afflicted. The remarkable cures of young children and the more wonderful cures of those of middle age and late in life, as illustrated by our printed testimonials, prove Hoop's Sarsaparilla to be a reliable remedy, containing remedial agents which do positively cure scrofula and eradicate it from the blood.

WARNER, N. H., Jan. 21, 1879.

MESSES. C. I. HOOD & Co., Lowell, Mass.: Gentlemen—For ten years previous to the early part of 1877 I had been a constant sufferer from scrofulous ulcers or sores, which had finally reduced me to a helpless condition, as described in my letter to you in September of that year. The continued excellent health which enables me to keep house for my aged father and to enjoy life, keeps alive my Intense personal interest in Hood's Sarsaparrilla, and I cannot refrain from expressing my gratitude for the permanent cure this wonderful medicine effected in my case nearly two years ago, while living in Lowell, when all my physicians gave me up as being in an incurable condition. One thing before I close. I have recommended your Sarsaparrilla to hundreds, and I 7hink more than a thousand cases, and my faith in its invincibility in curing scrofula has become absolute by the wonderful cures it has effected aside from my own. I trust you will not be slow in making the merits of Hood's Sarsaparrilla known everywhere, for it is a duty you owe to mankind. With best wishes I remain very 4ruly yours.

No other complaints are so insidious to their attack as those affecting the throat and lungs: none so trifled with by the majority of sufferers. The rdinary cough or cold, resulting perhaps from a trifling or unconscious exposure, is often but the beginning of a fatal sickness. AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL has well proven its efficacy in a forty years' fight with throat and lung diseases, and should be taken in all cases without delay.

A Terrible Cough Cured. "In 1857 I took a severe cold, which affected my lungs. I had a terrible cough, and passed night after night without sleep. The doctors gave me up. I tried AVER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, which relieved my lungs, induced sleep, and afforded me the rest necessary for the recovery of my strength. By the continued use of the PECTORAL a permanent cure was effected. I am now 82 years old, hale and hearty, and am satisfied your Cherry PECTORAL savedme. Horace Fairerother."

This was tried in small and frequent doses, and to our delight in less than half an hour the little patient was breathing easily. The doctor said that the CHERRY PECTORAL had saved my darling's life. I have been a great sufferer with rheumatism, caused by kidney difficulty, and have been treated by our best physicians, but they failed to reach my case or benefit me in the least. I saw in the Auburn papers the names of a number who had been permanently cured by the use of Rheumatic Syrup and being acquainted with many of them, I was induced to try it, and to my surprise I found that all pain had left me before I had finished the first bottle. I continued its use for a time and to-day, I am as well as ever and feel no more pain or trouble with my kidneys. It is rumored that one in authority at the high school building is again manipulating the wires to bring about a vacancy in the corps of high school teachers, in order that he may fill the position with a candidate of his own. It is thought quite possible that his efforts may lead to some disagreeable disclosures as to union school affairs.

Report reached here yesterday that Cyrus Sherman, a former resident of Ann Arbor, but living in Jackson for the past year, had shot himself in a fit of insanity. He has been sick for some time and the sickness has tended to overthrow his mind. Mr. Sherman was not expected to live. His mother went up to Jackson last night.

The Microscope, edited and published by Prof. C. H. Stowell and Mrs. Louisa Reed Stowell, entered upon its fourth volume with the January number of this year. Its publication will be transferred from Detroit to the COURIER office. The March number will be issued from here about the middle of the month. It is a monthly magazine, and a recognized authority upon the subjects to which it is especially devoted.

It will perhaps be remembered that in an item a few weeks since concerning Mr. Norton's insanity reference was made to his lack of means as a partial cause of his trouble. We have learned from two different sources that we were wrongly informed in this particular. The facts would indicate that Mr. Norton has been regularly supplied by his sisters at Ishpeming and elsewhere with money amply sufficient to meet his pecuniary wants; indeed, when taken sick, Mr. Norton had $34.86 on his person. He is reported much better.

HARVARD WINST HURRAHO RALE RAB THANKS

The above depicts a very pleasant feature of bicycling as a sport. The club have ridden from their headquarters in the city, to a suburban village some twenty miles away, where they await the arrival of the racing members who were to tart the thirty mixture letter. the arrival of the racing members who were to start just thirty minutes later.

Five minutes more and the two foremost of the racing men—Fri, on his "Harvard," and Yonson on his "Yale," appear in sight. The pace is tremendous: the men are neck and neck, and Dodges, the captain of the club, whom you observe is leaning on his "Shadow "light roadster, in the foreground, declares the race at te.

"Where are the other men?" he asks.

"Oh, behind, somewhere," is the reply.

"Are there any 'Harvard's' or 'Yale's' or 'Shadow's' among them?"

"Not one."

"Not one."
