THE IRON-CLAD CANOE.

From the N. Y. Evening Post.

The New Iron-Clad Steamer.

By EMILY P. PAGE.

When the girls are tidy-dressed, and the boys are in their best, and the whole ship is in a state of readiness, the iron-clad steamer is ready to start.

The iron-clad steamer is a vessel of a novel construction, and is adapted to the service of the navy.

The appearance of the steamer as she lies in the water differs very much from that of an ordinary vessel.

The hull of the vessel is of the strongest description, and is constructed almost exclusively of solid timbers.

The thickness of the "frame" (so-called) though built of solid timber, lies on the keel, is fourteen inches, and there is in addition a plank of four inches thick on the under side.

At the time of the rebel attack on the Norfolk yard, she was lying there in ordinary, as a store and receiving ship.

When the navy yard was assailed she was set fire to, and sunk by the rebels.

After the rebels had got possession of the yard they proceeded to raise the hull of the vessel.

Dinner Etiquette.

In a city where there is such a constant round of dinner parties, it is rather surprising that there is, among those who give and receive invitations to the hospitable rooms, such a want of knowledge, or, at any rate, a want of attention to the proper usage or etiquette on such occasions.

The principal rules and observances with a formal dinner party are:

1. A prompt answer. If the invitation is declined, the answer, if possible, should be given the same day.

2. The answer should be decisive, yes or no. There should be no contingency in the reply, such as that the guest will come if he is well enough, or in case he does not leave the city.

3. Punctual attendance is another duty of the guest. To keep a company of fifteen or twenty, or more, waiting for a lady guest, amounts to something very near to incivility to both the host and the punctual guests.

4. When an invitation to a formal dinner party is once accepted, an apology should never be sent except for a serious and substantial cause.

5. The health of the troops has been good, particularly on the march.

ISLAND NO. 10.—This island is situated in the corner of that bend of the Mississippi river which touches the border of Tennessee, a few miles farther up the river than New Madrid, although nearly south west of that point. It is located at about two hundred feet above the level of the delta, or its mouth.

The average depth of the water at this point is from thirty to one hundred feet, and the breadth of the stream from mainland to mainland about nine hundred yards. The current runs by the island at a moderate rate, and with the power of the three rivers—Mississippi, Missouri and Ohio—combined it is about forty-five miles, by the course of the river, south of Columbus, and about twenty-six miles from Hickman.

It is near Obionville.

It is something worse than had taste to invite a married gentleman to a lady's dinner party and omit his wife. It would be considered very entre to invite the lady and omit the gentleman, and yet this latter would really be less objectionable; for though in either case it would be more particularly so to the lady when she is omitted. It is no excuse for such an omission that the lady is in general feeble health, or especially sick at the time, or for any other cause. They are to decide the question, themselves, and to decline jointly or to accept by the gentleman, which he can do with propriety if his wife is invited, but which, of course, he would not do were she omitted and he previously aware that it was a ladies' party. All the difficulties of the case, however, if any existed, could easily be obviated if it was desired only to have the gentleman's company, by inviting him to a gentleman's party.

Of course, the host will see that proper arrangements are made by those having in charge, that the different courses are served in proper manner; that the table is in regular succession, and that the whole attendance at the table is prompt, regular and quiet. The serving of a dinner, and the attendance on "the feast," and an inferior dinner, well and properly served is preferable to a superior one badly arranged and served by awkward and untrained attendants in a hurried and confused manner.

Mr. Kitchener, in his amusing work, in the chapter on dinner etiquette, gives excellent rules and valuable hints, and has a high idea of the mutual and rigid obligations of the host and guests, and winds up by saying, "when the invitations to a dinner party are given and accepted, the guests should do, that is a reasonable excuse for their non-attendance; but if the host should die the executor is bound to give the dinner. We think the doctor is about right."

General Schenck and Washington's Birth-day.

General Schenck made a speech at Wheeling on Washington's birth-day, concluding happily as follows:

"But to-day, I have not attempted to say anything about the character of the American people. I have not, because I feel restrained in my approach to this subject, so sacred in the American heart. I have said that his precepts, delivered in that farewell address, appear to me such that, without irreverence, we may call them the political gospel of the country; and surely there is no irreverence in it, when an American utters a sentiment of that kind, if we remember what has been the estimation in which that good and good man (especially so good as green) has been held abroad. He was the man not merely of our nation, but of the man not merely of the world, who was the man of the world."

I wish to repeat a little anecdote—authentic because it occurred within the range of my own experience—in relation to the sort of feeling that is entertained abroad about our Washington. I mentioned it the other night on a little occasion given by your citizens. [Complimentary supper to the Legislature and Convention.] It is so impressive, so pleasant a remembrance, that I think you will agree with me that it was my fortune, some ten or twelve years ago, to find myself, upon one occasion, in the Island of Madeira. Among other places I was invited to visit the convent immediately back of the city. There is among the Sisters there, one who is accustomed, bright, entertaining and lady-like as she is—to come forward and receive visitors and give them explanations. Sister Clara, I think is her name, though I may have forgotten it. I remember of a party of American citizens, headed by myself, calling at the convent one day. We were drawn into a conversation with Sister Clara about the United States. She seemed particularly interested in the leading citizens of our country, "the great Republic," as she said, and remarked, in the course of conversation:

"I have read a good deal about your country. I know something about your great men."

"Ah! Sister Clara," said, "I am very happy to hear that. And, pray, which of our men do you admire most?"

"Well," said she, "I have read about Jefferson and Madison, and I am drawn into a conversation with the great men, and I think them very great men, indeed."

"But, Sister Clara," I said, "you forgot the greatest of them all."

"Who is that?"

"Washington."

"O, your Washington," said she, "it was your men I was speaking of; Washington is a saint." [Voices: "Amen!"]

"Let us go from here feeling that this 'Saint's day' has been well spent, if we revive in our minds the proper feelings which will carry a remembrance along with it to the guidance of our actions hereafter, according to the precepts read here to-day, which have been delivered to us as coming from the grave. [Great applause.]

The New Philadelphia Iron-Clad Frigate.

PHILADELPHIA, March 10.

The disastrous news from Fortress Monroe has had an alarming effect upon all classes of the people, and has awakened a renewed clamor for the rapid construction of iron-clad vessels. The effect upon government shipbuilders is evidenced in the fact that the force at work upon the new iron-clad Kearsarge frigate was largely increased, and operations pushed forward with unwonted rapidity.

THE

Yesterday afternoon we fired our thirteen inch mortar at the first time...

The mortar was trained directly at a point which was a distance of about forty-five degrees.

The shell was half a minute in its flight, and when it burst was apparently several hundred feet in the air...

EFFECT ON THE FIRING.

Several curious incidents attended the firing. The faces of the barrels were blown off and the shells were blown into the water.

Who Sustain the Government?

The Detroit Tribune and Advertiser and several "country" republican papers are just now engaged in a ridiculous attempt to make the people believe that secret democratic clubs exist in various cities and towns in this State.

The democrats of this State are all loyal, and there can not be found in this State any secessionists as co operators with the republicans.

The forward movement on the Potomac, has at last commenced. This division moved this morning at 6 o'clock, in a rain storm.

The democrats stand by the President in all constitutional matters to close this war, and give him a much more generous support than Charles Sumner and all that class of politicians who look for a new Union and a new Constitution.

Our men fought until all their ammunition was spent, when an order to charge bayonets was given, and the works were finally taken at the point of the bayonet.

Just as the battle terminated the fog lifted and enabled our gunboats, which had been waiting for an opportunity to participate in the fight.
