MY LOVERS.

In the early golden morning, Waking at the break of day, While my little, youngest darling, Close beside me nestling lay.

As I looked he sudden opened, Eyes that sparkled with love-light, While he spoke in cooing tone, "When said he, 'I've elected you; For, 'tis my darling, my true love, 'You are good and pretty, too.'"

Oh, my little precious darling! Oh, my little love true! Always finding in his mother What is best and fairest too.

Answer me, true-hearted mothers! (Many such, thank God, there be): In your fairest, rosiest girlhood "Fonder lovers did you see?"

A Brave Girl. Our heroine lived in Bartlett, N. H., and was a descendant of the old Crawfords.

She laid aside her work and went to get the water. When she came back the man had entered the room. She did not like this, for she was sure he had come in by the window.

"Look ye, my young lady," he said, "I know there's money in this house; and I know that you are alone. Show me where the money is!

Mark Twain produces one of the most striking cases of meanness on record. He says he hired a man to blast a rock, and he was punching powder with a crowbar, when a premature explosion followed sending the man and crowbar off to right.

A Boston writer comes to the defense of women against the current notion that they are peculiarly addicted to gossip, alleging that in a country grocery store, among barrels of molasses and piles of salt fish, more gossip is talked by men in one evening than is heard in all the farm-houses in the town.

Donna Platt on Colfax's Deposition.

The publication of four excellent and admirable Vice-President's affidavits, or, as it is called, depositions, touching the vindication of the infuriated husband, in New York, is a great relief to the social, political, agricultural and pomological circles.

The Hon. Schuyler has been so prominent in times past as a free-soiler, that a mad suspicion, not to say fear, fell upon the moral community here, that he might also be tinged with free love. It seems natural that a free-soiler should also be a free-lover.

But we breathe easier. The Hon. Schuyler has taken a swear at the case, and comes out triumphantly. He sits aloft, like Patience on a monument smiling at grief, which always struck me as very aggravating to Grief.

The Hon. Vice President first of all calmly and with dignity swore to his age. He had arrived at the age of discretion. He was forty-seven and upward, which means more or less, as it were.

Madame George Sand has lived a romance, as well as written many. By crooked paths, such as great families rarely traverse outside of France, she traces her lineage back through misalliances of nobles and shop girls to Marshal Saxe.

Now there are some curious circumstances attending this event. These two ladies were evidently disloyal. What were they doing at the house of Mr. Sinclair while the cruel war was progressing?

Every woman is wise enough and careful enough to secure for her household every bit of available sunshine during the cold winter months. Great point is taken to get a southern exposure for them.

George Augustus Sala relates a story told him by Jefferson, the actor, of himself, how that meeting one night a girl who was he had quarreled and neglected, he implacably her forgiveness. "Oh!" replied the girl to Jefferson, "it is of no consequence now—my father has struck her."

A little Connecticut boy, asking a mate who Good Friday was, received the withering reply: "Well, you've heard and read your Robinson Crusoe."

Picked Up.

We picked up a letter in the street the other day, of which the following is a copy, excepting the addresses. The owner can have the original by calling at our office:

DEAR BROTHERS, SISTERS, COUSINS, Aunts, Uncles, etc.:—I now take my seat and set down to take this opportunity to inform you that I am "Daddy" that is, I suppose I am, for Abbie has got a nice fat baby, and we hope these few lines will find you enjoying the same great blessing.

Under the present system, we know of an intelligent and patriotic gentleman, who has been a voter for nearly thirty years, who has voted at nearly every election; and yet, who has never voted for a successful candidate, save in the presidential elections for Lincoln and Grant.

Do our young women know what it is that strikes one who has been away from the country for a time the most unpleasantly on his return? It is not their faces, assuredly, which for regularity of outline, and delicacy and freshness of tint, are unsurpassed, indeed are not equaled, by anything that one sees abroad, save in the finest pictures.

Democratic Representation.

No more important question is before the public than that which relates to the proper mode of arriving at a fair and adequate expression of the popular mind. The theory of this government is that the people, i. e. the aggregate of the inhabitants of proper age and competent intellect, rule the affairs of the state; but the practice is, as it is shown elsewhere, that only an inconsiderable minority have any real and effective political existence.

That is the question. Our correspondents do not discuss the various schemes which have been proposed, all more or less practicable, but not entirely without objection. An integral representation of all the voters of a community is hardly possible under any combination that can be devised; but a proportional representation that shall be more complete and just than that of a mere majority is both possible and desirable.

Under the present system, we know of an intelligent and patriotic gentleman, who has been a voter for nearly thirty years, who has voted at nearly every election; and yet, who has never voted for a successful candidate, save in the presidential elections for Lincoln and Grant.

The Gambler's Passion.

A New York correspondent tells this of the downward progress of young men in the city: "New York is full of young men who are compelled to be idle, and having no employment, are driven to crime to support life. Such young men as bring money to the city are quickly led into temptation. The adroitness with which they are roped in is almost surprising, and when once they have tasted the Green crop the power of resistance is lost. The brothel, the low concert room, the drinking houses and gambling saloons of this city have done a larger business during the past winter than ever before, and hence the season has witnessed a great destruction of life and character. For instance, a countryman who, with his wife, was stopping at the Astor, was recently led into John Morrissey's gaming hell in Broadway, near Union Square, and played $4,000. This loss only excited his frenzy, and in hope of retrieving it, he borrowed $2,000 of his wife without explanation, and lost that also. The pair were left utterly destitute, and as a matter of course, their complaint to the police was a waste of words.

Another instance which came to my knowledge, was that of a young man who came here to buy goods, and who also was roped and cleaned out. Such was his distress that he at once took passage for Havana, and died on shipboard of fever. I presume that not less than $100,000 per week has changed hands at the various halls in this city during the past winter. All this is done in the face of prohibitory laws. But what are laws in a place like this, where money and politics equally defeat justice? Our police is too well paid by our princely blacklegs to interfere with the operations of the latter, unless forced to do so, and then they contrive to send word of their approach.

The passion for gambling is probably the most invincible and absorbing of all the masters of the soul. I have known a number of gifted business men who were utterly incapable of resisting it. Here, for instance, is H—L—, who is so helpless that he can not be trusted to collect a bill. He is a capital salesman in a large jobbing store, but if any of the country customers who meet him at the hotel should pay him an account, he rushes at once to the gambling room and tries his luck. In this way he has utterly lost confidence, and it can never be regained. One night I was awakened by this fellow with an appeal for a loan. All he wanted was $10. He was in intense excitement, and said that he had been playing and lost all, but he knew that if he could have played twice more he would have turned and he would have broken the bank; and, as it was $5 a throw, $10 would suffice. Reasoning under such circumstances was in vain, and my only way of getting rid of the fellow was by giving consent. His watch—a cheap thing—was left as security, and having got the money, he darted off in high spirits. I did not see him again for six months, and I need hardly add, the watch was never redeemed. This ruinous youth possessed rare abilities, but they were all wrecked by the absorbing passion."

There were two pretty sisters who had married, one an eminent lawyer, and the other an eminent literary man. Literary man dies and leaves the younger sister a widow. Some years roll on, and the widow lays aside her weeds. Now, then, it happens that a certain author and critic has occasion, on a broiling day in summer, to call on the eminent lawyer, husband of the elder sister.

He finds the lawyer pleading and sweating in a crowded court; sees that the lawyer is suffering dreadfully from the heat, pities him, rejoices that himself is not a lawyer, and goes for a cool saunter under the sheltering trees of a fashionable park and garden.

Among the ice-eating, fanning crowd there he meets the younger of our two sisters, and for a moment he thinks he is speaking to the elder:

"Oh, Mr. M.," answered the lady, "how dreadfully hot it is here!" "Yes, madame," replies our luckless critic, "it is hot here; but I can assure you the heat of this place isn't a circumstance when compared with the heat of the interior with a hard-wood cabin, and in every respect a graceful and elegant craft. She was built by the Police, of Brooklyn, New York, for their own use, but was subsequently sold to Mr. Wm. Douglas, of New York city, a thorough yachtsman, who, by the time of his correspondence with his English rival, and the evident desire to obtain a fair trial of his schooner, has secured the approval of all American yachtsmen.

Safety from mols for furs consists in having them undisturbed through summer a snug place. Muff boxes are not secure. Taking them out occasionally to air exposes them to the moth. No pepper, camphor or tobacco is needed; after you have worn them for the last time in spring put them into a linen pillow-case, tie up the end in a tight knot, and shut them up in a drawer, which will not be often opened. A true and tried prescription.

ASAPRATS PICKLES.—Fill your jar with asparagus, make a strong brine, pour it on hot. When you wish them to be used for pickles, take them out and boil them down; then cover them with vinegar. They can also be used for sauce by boiling them tender and then butter and season with salt and pepper.

Detected by a Foolish Letter. The Pittsburg (Pa.) Mail says that about three weeks ago a teller in one of the city banks found at the close of the day's transactions that his cash was deficient to the extent of $500. After much fruitless search, the teller came to the conclusion that he would have to stand the loss.

One morning he was surprised by the receipt of a letter, proposing to restore the amount if a suitable reward was paid. It immediately occurred to the teller to compare the disguised handwriting with that of each document which had passed through his hands on the day in question. In the process of a comparison more than once repeated, he discovered a draft in which he could trace some indication of similarity. His next step was to have the whole of the drafts of this individual written under every variety of circumstances, sought out and carefully scrutinized. His suspicions were confirmed.

Being a resolute fellow, and feeling that delay might be dangerous, he supplied himself with a pistol, and with two friends on whom he could rely, took the bold step of going to the house of the suspected party, in Allegheny, which was reached at a late hour in the evening. On obtaining a private interview the matter was explained, and the teller's mistake had taken place between them on money matters, which was disastrous of having arranged.

In reply he received a flat denial of any such mistake having occurred. Finding that mild tactics was ineffectual, he altered his tactics; told him with a determined air that he was in no mood to be trifled with, and that he had indubitable evidence of the money having been obtained by him. Presenting his pistol, he threatened to shoot the offender on the spot if the money was not immediately forthcoming.

Thrown off his guard by the sudden and extraordinary appeal, the poor man fell into a tremulous fit and admitted that he had been overpaid $500. He gave the teller a check for the amount, and offered him a bonus to keep the matter from publicity.

The teller indignantly refused the bribe, but consented to keep the culprit's name from public notoriety.

Con.—Dave C.—is one of that inimitably cool, audacious class of men who will, without the least hesitation in the world, go anywhere and do anything of which they are capable, without regard to time, place, degree, or manner. Happening in a Western capital during the session of the Legislature, he heard some of his acquaintances complaining at the breakfast-table of the unnecessary severity with which the sergeant-at-arms enforced the rule excluding all others than members from the floor. It seemed that the rule was one of long standing, but that until the session there in question the Legislature of the officers had allowed it to be evaded in some cases. Now, however, it was being rigidly enforced; and the remarks that Dave heard about the arrogance and insolence of this new incumbent, dressed in a "little brief authority," were strong and bitter. "I think he'll admit me," Dave observed. "I think he won't," was the positive rejoinder. "I saw him turn away a United States Senator and an Ex-Governor yesterday, so saying to the best people of the city."

"But you ten dollars that I go in," said Dave; and the money was immediately put up. After breakfast, Dave strolled over to the States-house, with the others following, curious to see the result of his attempt. Assuming an important and knowing look, our adventurer presented himself at the door of the hall with several members who were about entering; but the lynx-eyed sergeant failed to recognize him a member, and stopped him with the salutation, "Oh, you are, are you?" "Dave C.," said he, was the ready response. "Oh, you are, are you?" sneered the member. "Have I seen you here before, I'd like to know?" "Very likely, very likely," replied Dave, in his brisk, easy way. "I think you've heard me, but I've not many small ones about here that I can't say for certain." The official stood against the nonchalant impudence of the reply, and Dave elbowed his way in, and won his bet.—Lippincott's Magazine.

The Sappho. The victorious American yacht Sappho is said to be one of the finest, ablest and fastest of all American or English yachts. Her dimensions are: length of keel, 113 feet; length on water line, 112.5 feet; length on deck, 125 feet; length on hull, 154.8 feet; beam, 27 feet; depth of hold, 11 feet. She draws twelve feet of water aft and seven forward, carries a square sail, a staysail, two gaff top sails and five lower sails, and has great buoyancy and stability of form, both of which come from a good model and 65 tons of ballast, stowed with fine judgment. In her model she carries out the American idea of construction. Her bows are very long and fine, and her lines forward are nearly straight. She has very little concavity. One peculiarity forward is her bowsprit, which is built in her, thus securing one-third more strength than by the usual plan of a third leg spar. Her hull is all dead wood and drag no water, leaving a narrow wake. She stands up well; is remarkably quick in stays, is well sparred and nearly as strong as crystallized rock; built of oak, louest and hackmatack; finished on the interior with a hard-wood cabin, and in every respect a graceful and elegant craft. She was built by the Police, of Brooklyn, New York, for their own use, but was subsequently sold to Mr. Wm. Douglas, of New York city, a thorough yachtsman, who, by the time of his correspondence with his English rival, and the evident desire to obtain a fair trial of his schooner, has secured the approval of all American yachtsmen.

Total, 13,624 $6,091.95 $89.81. We hope that the School Inspectors of the several townships, having the libraries in charge, will find no serious difficulty in investing the large amount of funds falling to their portion, in readable books.

The following paragraph furnished for the Detroit Tribune, by its Kalamazoo itemizer, has a local interest which warrants a transfer to our columns:

The proposed quarter centennial celebration of the State University excites a lively interest among the alumni throughout the State.

There need no longer be any doubt that ANNA DICKINSON is a benevolent woman, that she actually overflows with the "milk of human kindness." In proof, it is only necessary to say that she cheerfully accepted an invitation to lecture at East Saginaw a short time ago.

Michigan University is not the only institution the students of which are given to developing "pure cussedness," disguised as fun, rather than to the acquisition of "learning." Witness the following paragraph cut from the New York World:

The residents on the south end of State street, and in the sixth ward adjoining, were routed out of a sound sleep about 2 o'clock A. M., on Friday morning last, by an alarm of fire, some vicious scallawag—old or young—having set fire to an old frame barn belonging to Mrs. GEORGE SMITH.

The June Magazines. The June number of Lippincott's Magazine closes volume V. The table of contents leads off with "Thomas Tyler's Tombstone," by Mary S. Walker, followed by an instructive article by H. Hargrave, upon "Paraguay and the Lopez Family."

The Galaxy, always on time, comes to hand with a varied, readable and entertaining list of articles, headed with two more chapters of "Put Yourself in his Place," by Chas. Reade, and followed by Tobacco-plagi and Tobaccophilism, American Men and Englishmen, Keeping the Cash, Ten Years in Rome, Two Women, Early Incidents of the Rebellion, Drift-Wood, etc.

The Catholic World has, among other papers: Mr. Froude's History of England; Dion and Sibyls, (continued); The Pope and the Council, by Janus; The Little Wooden Shoe; Cardinal Pole; The Young Vermonter; Catholicity and Pantheism—IX; Britanny: its People and its Poems; Gerald Griffin; The First Ecumenical Council of the Vatican—V; Foreign Literary News, etc.

The June Atlantic opens with three more chapters of Joseph and his Friends, by Bayard Taylor, and in which some of the characters seem to be developing; has, Drives from a French Farm, by P. S. Hammett; an essay on William Hazlitt, by H. T. Tuckerman; French and English Illustrated Magazines, by Eugene Benson; Oldtown Fireside Stories, by Mrs. Stowe; The Correspondence of Napoleon Bonaparte, rather Partisan; The English Government at the Stames Court, III.; The Logic of Marriage and Murder, by Henry James; Poems, Reviews, etc.

The Eclectic for June is embellished with a steel portrait of Henry Ward Beecher, and its table of contents includes: Geological Theory in Great Britain, Edinburgh Review; Colors of the Double Stars, St. Paul's; Chatterton, Blackwood; Lectures on the Science of Religion, by Max Muller, I.; The Place Where Light Dwelleth, British Quarterly; with lesser articles, poetry, art notes, &c. A new volume will begin with the July issue. $5 a year. Address, E. R. PALMER, 108 Fulton street, N. Y.

Arthur's Home Magazine is welcomed monthly to our table, and always contains something readable, besides the fashion plates and illustrations. The June number has a good table of contents, $2 a year. Address, T. S. ARTHUR & SONS, Philadelphia.

From the same we have the Children's Hour, filled with little stories for little ears, and pictures sure to attract the attention of the little ones. $1.25 per year. Address as above.

Dexter.—Items here, as in Ann Arbor, are decidedly scarce, seldom anything occurring out of the daily routine of business which may be classed as an event. Quite an improvement is being made by grading the street leading from the depot to the business part of the village. This improvement meets with some opposition now, on account of the heavy tax which it incurs, but the appearance will be so much better after it is completed that we are sure nothing can be said against it.
