The Michigan Central Railroad. NEW TIME TABLE. Trains on the Michigan Central Railroad now leave stations as follows:

IN VACATION. How wonderful this pilgrimage! On every side new worlds appear. I weigh the wisdom of the sage, And find it wanting here.

Give me the tongue that Adam knew, To question and discourse with thee— To taunt the jay with jacket blue, And quarrel with the bees.

Now through the pasture, and across the brook, white flocks of sparrows try To quit the world, and wildly toss Their forms against the sky.

But might is coming, as I think; The moving air is growing cool; I hear the hoarse frog's hollow chirp Around the weedy pool.

From the Bohemian. A MORNING CALL ON FRANCE. Recent events in the startling career of Napoleon III. have so monopolized public attention.

There are hundreds of people whose chief joy is to help others on. Now it is a smile, now a word, now ten dollars.

Human nature is the same in boy as man. All reaching to gain the veil of success. Some are "pry" and gain that for which they strive.

Well, John, I can't to night, anything to do with a headache. Just this talk has got my head throbbing so; it's really dreadful!

There is a golden chariot of wealth rolling down the street. A thousand people are trying to catch it. They run and tug!

It is strange that there should be any rivalries among ministers of religion, when there is so much room for all to work.

A fair woman passes. We admire beauty. He that says he don't love a woman! I know him when he blackens the white shoes!

The love of the soil is one of the most common passions of humanity. To own even thirty feet is the ambition of the poorest and the rich are never satisfied.

Everybody knows there's no place like home, and so everybody with an sense tries to establish a home as soon as money can be earned by it.

One. In it you behold the nucleus of the army of the empire. In effect, the tiny band that awaited the landing of Napoleon consisted only of a subaltern and a mere handful of men.

The undaunted courage which the Prince Napoleon displayed on this occasion stamped him, in spite of all subsequent insinuations to the contrary, as the man of the most determined bravery.

Then ensued a scene which, according to the captain of the Edinburgh Castle, must ever be a blot upon the humanity of the French as a nation.

At last the firing ceased (from no motive of humanity, but to prevent the fugitives regarding the shelter of the survivors). One of the men who was Dr. Cousseur, who after cheerfully accepting the six years' subsequent imprisonment.

Wounded as he was, the Prince still struggled gallantly to reach the Edinburgh Castle; but it was not to be. The worthy captain, who had watched his efforts with the intensest interest.

Shortly after embarking, the Prince summoned the whole of his adherents below to the saloon, where he unfolded to them his daring project, which was received with the most enthusiastic appreciation.

They don't know what his Christian name is, pursued our friend, "but he is the owner of some very fine oxen."

My Mr. Wall, continued my friend hesitatingly, "has been represented to me as being a very close-fisted man, and not scrupulously honest in all of his transactions."

We hate to be impolite, but the truth is, the women of this noble republic are not to be trusted in the society of the children of royalty.

From the New York World. How an Ex-Empress Dresses. LONDON, Oct. 18. The Empress received us at 3 o'clock. The hour fixed for our audience had already passed, and the Empress and the ladies and gentlemen of her suite were upon the point of going out for their usual promenade at the moment we arrived at the Camden House.

Her Majesty, being prepared for her promenade, was dressed in a walking costume of a most exquisite shade of silk. The petticoat was of silk, trimmed with three flounces of velvet, the faintest shade darker than the silk, over which she wore a tunic and jacket of French merino of the finest and softest texture.

The ladies wore black hats with black veils, and black gloves. The Empress wore a black hat with a black veil, and black gloves. The Empress wore a black hat with a black veil, and black gloves.

THE THREE "TENTIONS." I. Attention.—If a boy has a sun to work out, or a lesson to learn by heart, he will not be apt to succeed unless he goes at it with a will, or unless he "intends" to do it.
