Cultivating Fruit Orchards. There continues to be considerable difference of opinion as to whether fruit orchards should be cultivated or not.

As to dwarf pear and apple trees the treatment should be quite different. We cultivate the soil about the same as any other kind of fruit trees.

Transplanting Trees and Vines. The great difficulty to be encountered in transplanting trees, vines, or plants of any sort is, that in many instances many of the roots are severed from the stem and are left where they originally grew.

By transplanting trees and vines at the former part of the growing season, they will be required to stand only a few weeks without a vital hold in the soil.

Balky Horses. The brain of a horse seems to entertain but one thought at a time: for this reason, continued whipping is out of the question, and only confirms his stubbornness.
