THANKSGIVING. BY B. P. SHILLABER.

Many and bright are the scenes that are planned,
Many the hearts that with gladness expand,
Many the hopes with fruition at hand,
And the voice of the turkey is heard in the land;
For Thanksgiving day
Is welcomed alway.
A heart-warming, glorious, genial season,
When the feelings, repressed
By traffic's behest,
On one day at least, for dominion contest,
And strive, as of old, to be specially blest,
While care is a species of treason.

The city shuts up its shop for the day,
The oldest and youngest play or pray;
The churches are open in the ancient way,
For preachers to utter whatever they may,
With few to listen to what they say,
While all the chaises and carriages
Are dashing around with their merry loads
Of babies dressed in their prettiest modes,
To dump at the doors of kindred abodes—
Or filled with those still happier nodes
Who rush to try that best of codes
Which binds us up in marriages.

The land is vocal with psalm and prayer, And joy's glad note sounds everywhere, And savory streams like clouds arise,
To tickle the palate and glad the eyes
Of lovers of virtue and pumpkin pies,
Where grave and gay, and dull and wise
Pay tribute to gustation.

> TOM'S THANKSGIVING. A Story for the Season.

"It was very provoking that seam-stresses and such people would get married, like the rest of the world," Mrs. Greenough said, half in fun and half in earnest. Her fall sewing was just com-BACH & ABEL, dealers in Dry Goods, Groceries, etc., No. 26 South Main street, Ann arbor, Mich. had suited her so nicely, going off to be married, and she had no resource but to advertise, and take whomsoever she could get. No less than ten women had been there that day, and not one would answer. "There comes number eleven; you will see," she cried, as the bell rang.

Kitty Greenough looked on with interest. Indeed, it was her gowns, rather than her mother's, that were most press-ing. She was just 16, and since last winter she had shot up suddenly, as girls at that age so often do, and left all her clothes behind her.

Mrs. Greenough was right-it was another seamstress, and Bridget showed in a plain, sad-looking woman of about 40, with an air of intense respectability. Mrs. Greenough explained what she wanted done, and the woman said quiet-For terms inquire at residence, No. 48 South State ly that she was accustomed to such work—would Mrs. Greenough be so kind as to look at some recommendations? dorsed the bearer, Mrs. Margaret Graham, as faithful and capable, used to trimmings of all sorts, and quick to

"To-morrow, if you wish, madam," was the answer, and then Mrs. Graham Kitty Greenough was an impulsive, imaginative girl; no subject was too dull or too unpromising for her fancy to touch it. She made a story for herself about every new person who came in her way. After number eleven had gone down stairs, Kitty laughed. "Isn't she a sobersides, mamma? I don't believe there will be any frisk in my dresses at all if she trims them. 'There'll be frisk enough in them if you wear them," her mother answered, smiling at the bright, saucy, winsome face of her one tall daughter, Kitty was ready to turn the conversa-

and a thoroughly good one she proved; "better even than Lizzie," Mrs. Greenough said, and this was high praise. She sewed steadily, and never opened her lips except to ask some question about her work. Even Kitty, who used to boast that she could make a dumb man talk, had not audacity enough to intrude on the reserve in which Mrs. Graham intrenched herself.

"He's worse this morning," whispered saucy Kitty to her mother; "and she can do nothing but think about him and

"And why-what-Tom-" Kitty struggled desperately with the Alty struggled desperately with the question she had begun to ask, and Tom kindly helped her out.

"Why am I Tom, do you mean, when it's a boy's name; or why can't I walk? I'm Tom because my father called me Tomasina, after his mother, and we can't afford such long names in this house; and I can't walk because I pulled a kettle of boiling water over on myself when tle of boiling water over on myself when I was 6 years old, and the only wonder is that I'm alive at all. I was left, you see, in a room by myself, while mother was busy somewhere else, and when she heard me scream, and came to me, she pulled me out from under the kettle, of tears filled Mrs. Graham's eyes, which and saved the upper half of me all

Kitty glanced around the room, which seemed to her so bare. It was spotlessly clean, and Tom's chair was soft and comfortable—as, indeed, a chair ought to be which must be sat in from morning till night. Opposite to it were a few pictures on the wall—engravings taken from books and magazines, and given, probably, to Mrs. Graham by some of her lady customers. Within easy reach was a little stand, on which stood a rose-bush in a pot, and a basket full of of bright-colored worsteds, while a book or two laid beside them. "And do you never go out?" cried Kitty, forgetting her errand in her sympathy, forgetting, too, that Luke and his impatient horse were waiting below. "Not lately. Mother used to take me down into the street sometimes; but I'm not very dull, even when she's gone. You wouldn't guess how many things I see from my window; and then I make worsted mats and tidies, and mother sells them; and then I sing."

Kitty stepped to the window to see eye fell on Luke. She recalled her bus-mother to sew two or three days for me this week.

Tom was alert and business-like at

Kitty pulled off her pretty gray glove and wrote her name and address with thibet—a proud, happy-looking Tom as the little toy-pencil at the end of her you could find in Boston that Thanks-chatelaine; and then she turned to go, but it was Tom's turn to question. "Please," said the sweet, fresh voice, which seemed so like the clear carol of a bird, "would you mind telling me how old you are? I'm 16 myself.' "And so am I 16," said Kitty. "And you have a father and mother both, haven't you?" "Yes indeed," said Kitty.

"Oh, I've only mother, but she is good as two. Must you go, now? And wonder if I shall ever see you again?" 'Yes, you will see me again," answered young heart, she bent over and touched her lips to the bright, bonny face of the poor girl who must sit prisoner there forever, and yet who kept this bright cheerfulness all the time. "Oh, mamma, I've had a lesson," cried Kitty, bursting into her mother's room like a fresh wind, "and Tom has taught it to me; and he isn't he at all-she's a girl just my age, and she can't walk not a step since she was years old." And then Kitty told all the sad, tender little story, and got to crying over it herself, and made her mother cry, too, before she got through. After dinner she sat half the evening in a brown study. Finally she came out of it, and began talking in her usual "Can't we have them here to Thanksgiving, mamma? There's not a single retty thing in that house except Tom, erself, and the rosebush; and everything did look so bare, and clean, and poverty stricken; and I know they'll never afford a good dinner in the world. Oh, say yes, mamma, dear. I know you'll say yes, because you're such a dear, and you love to make every one happy.'

"Yes; but first of all, I must love to to make papa happy, must I not? You know he never wants any company on Thanksgiving but grandpa, and grandma, and Uncle John. I'm sure you would not like to spoil papa's old-fashioned Thanksgiving day."

Kitty's countenance fell. She saw the ustice of her mother's remark, and there was no more to be said. She sat thinking over her disappointment in a silence which her mother was the one to break. "But I've thought of a better thing, Puss," said this wise mamma, who was herself every bit as tender of heart as Kitty, and cared just as much about making people happy. "No doubt Mrs. Graham and Tom would just as much prefer being alone together as papa pre-ers to be alone with his family; and ow will it suit you if I have a nice dinner prepared for them, and let you go and take it to them in the coupe? Mrs. Graham is hardly the woman one could take such a liberty with; but I'll beg her to let you have the pleasure of sending that, apart from his discovery of Amerlinner to Tom." "Oh, you darling !" and Mrs. Greenough's neck-ruffle suffered, and her hair

"I guess mamma was right after all," thought willful Kitty. "It's rather curious how often mamma is right, when I come to think of it."

Mrs. Greenough consented to it all. I think she enjoyed the prospect of Tom's ride herself, just as much as Kitty did. While Mrs. Graham was sewing ceptance of both drive and dinner in the light of a personal favor to Kitty, who "Do you had ever seen them before. "Do you think I am so weakly, wickedly proud as to be hurt because you take an interest in my poor girl, and want to put a little happiness into her life—that still, sad life which she bears so patiently? God bless you, Miss Kitty; and if He doesn't it won't be because I shall get tired of saking Him?"

vith such care; scarcely gave a thought to the family festivities at home, so ea-ger was she about Tom's Thanksgiving. She was to go to Hudson street just at noon, so that Tom might have the benefit of the utmost warmth of which the chill November was capable.

First she saw the dinner packed. There was a turkey, and cranberry sauce, and mince-pie, and plum-pudding, and a great cake full of plums, too, and fruit, and nuts, and then Mr. Greenough, ed to the window to see vision it offered, and her real interest, brought out a bottle of particularly-nice sherry, and said to his wife: "Put that in also. It will do those "I came to see if I could get your another to sew two or three days for me his week."

The that in also.

At last impatient Kitty was off. Bridget and the basket filled all the spare space in the coupe, and, when had gathered together an immense they reached Hudson street, Luke took "Let me see," she said; "to-day is the dinner and followed Kitty up stairs, Tuesday," and she drew toward her a while Bridget stood by the horse's little book, and looked it over. "To- head, according to the programme. He morrow is engaged, but you could have set the basket down in the hall, where Thursday, Friday and Saturday, if you want so much. Please write your name opening the door, and then he stood out of sight himself, while Kitty went in. There was Tom, in the warm crimson giving day. "I have come to take you to ride," cried eager Kitty. "Will you go?"

It was worth ten ordinary Thanksgivings to see the look on Tom's face-the joy and wonder, and then the doubt, as the breathless question came : "How will I get down stairs?"

And then Luke was called in, and that mystery was solved. And then out closet came the warm jacket, and the hat, with its gay feather; and there were tears in Tom's eyes, and smiles round her lips, and she tried to say something, and broke down utterly. And then big, strong Luke took her up as if she were a baby, and marched down stairs with her, while she heard Kitty say-but it all seemed to her like deep breath which was almost a sob, and "Did you think there was nothing pretty to see to-day-this day? Why, didn't know there was such a world! The clocks had struck 12 when they eft Hudson street; the bells were ringfor I when they entered it again. Bridget was gone, but a good-natured Kitty waited to hear neither thanks nor exclamations. She saw Tom's brown eyes as they rested on the table, and that was enough. She bent for one moment over the bright face—the cheeks which the out-door air had painted red as the rose that had just opened in honor of the day—and left on the young, sweet, wistful lips a kiss, and then went silently down the stairs, leaving Tom and Tom's mother to their Thanksgiving.

A COLONY OF TRAMPS. lous Community-How the Ragged

Rascals Pass Their Time. In a woodland on Darby road, in one of the most picturesque sections of country in the vicinity of Philadelphia, there s a certain community or settlement of tramps. During the day they lounge around fires of brushwood, made in a little stony hollow, sometimes singing, sometimes cooking, or mending, or washing, sometimes drinking. Occasionally some of them, spurred by appetite or tired of idleness, go out in the fields and gather herbs or flowers and bring them into the city to sell, and with the money received buy whisky, upon which they all get drunk and make the woods ring with songs and boisterous laughter, or savage cries. The size of this mot-ley gathering varies with the time and the seasons. It hardly ever numbers less than twenty, and has reached to eighty. There are men and women, old and young. Nearly all day long, as I have said, they linger around the fires in the wood, and when the weather is not unpleasantly cold they also sleep out under the trees, but in the winter, and when storms of great violence occur, they take refuge in barns in the neighborhood. Upon a beautiful wooded knoll they have set up a little cabin made of logs and the bark of trees. In the stony hollow in the side of a hill, where hey pass much of their time, they have kettles and pans and other household utensils, and a wooden tripod upon which to hang a kettle over a fire, and strung from tree to tree, lines upon whire to hang their clothes to dry. They fare well. They beg from the farmers in the neighborhood, who dare not refuse em, and fear even to murmur at their demands. Any offense to them might result in the burning of the barn or home of the helpless offender. It is no wonler that a man should live in dread with tion; a decline that has continued to the present time, and bids fair to go still further. Forestalling the Census-Taker by a Guess at Possibilities—Figures Showing the Increase of Population of the United States

Since 1790. [From the New York Sun.] The speculative American mind is alady exercised concerning the present opulation of our beloved country, and s taxing its Yankee privilege of guessing what that population will be in the year 1880—if this weary old world lives ong enough to hail that year of enumera-

Under ordinary and regular condition the merest tyro in mathematics could forecast our increase. But the conditions are not ordinary, and great allowances must be made for variations. For instance, if we had a certain ratio of increase from 1840 to 1850, and from 1850 to 1860, it would naturally follow, suposing conditions equal, that something like a similar ratio would prevail for the next ten years. But the conditions are radically changed; the circumstances are not only different but exceptional, and no formula of the past can be made to apply. The war of the Rebellion, besides abolishing slavery and upsetting almost every established idea and institution in the land, made fearful inroads into the population of the country. There was not only the loss by battle and attending evils, but the absence of 500,000 of young and middle-aged men necessarily reduced the natural increase in times of peace. Then there was a rapid decline in immigra-

SECTIONAL MIGRATION.

It is little satisfaction to take State by State, and show where the people of the several States go to when they go at all. We are essentially sectional, and our internal migration runs on lines of latitude in the most remarkable manner. publishers of Sertimer's Monday announce, for the year to come, the following papers:

The Picturesque Side of American Farm Lite.—This subject will be treated in a series of separate papers engaged from writers who stand in the front rank among Americans, both in qualities of style and in keen insight of nature. Mr. R. E. Robinson, author of a delightful paper on "Fox-Hunting in New England" in the January number, will represent the same section in this series. John Burroughs, whose papers on similar topies have been a highly prized and popular feature of Seribner, will write of Farm Life in New York. Maurice Thompson, the poet-naturalist, will describe the characteristics of Western farming, of which but little has been written. It is expected that the illustration of this series will be of a refined and typical character, commensurate with the subject-matter. It is thought that no paper or series of papers yet issued in Seribner will so fully realize the constant desire of the magazine to keep out of the ruts, and, both in text and illustrations, to obtain quality rather than quantity, and to print fresh, strong and delicate work from original sources. At the "Combination Store," opposite where I used to be. Having a new and complete stock of Notices of the Press.

The veteran Magarine, which long ago outgrew its original title of the New Monthly Magarine, has not in the least abated the popularity it won at the outset, but has added to it in many ways, and has kept farrly abreast of the times, thanks to the enterprise of the publishers and the tact and wisdom of its editors. For whatever is best and most readable in the literature of travel, 'iscovery and fletion, the average reader of to-day looks to Harper's Magazine, just as expectantly as did the reader of a quarter of a century ago; there is the same admirable variety of contents and the same freshness and suggestiveness in its editorial departments now as then —Boston Journal.

J. M. Farley, of Marshall, late deputy Clerk of this county, and well known to our citizens has proved himself the traveler's benefactor by inventing a device for getting rid of the smoke and cinders which issue from the locomotive smoke stack and are a source of annoyance to all travelers by rail. Everybody knows what It makes Low Prices ! a disagreeable thing it is to be obliged to close the doors and windows in hot weather, in order to have one's eyes, nose, and ears filled with smoke and cinders, often proving even dangerous on account of inflammation setting in, and not infrequently causing the loss of an eye.

Mr. Farley's invention consists in attaching horizontal sheet iron tube, about 20 inches in diameter, on the top of each car and also or the top of the locomotive, the whole being connected together when the train is made up All motions of the cars are provided for by an elastic coupling, made on the buffer order, and intended to be used on all joints following the baggage car, the same to act in concert with an unique oscillating joint, which provides for People vs. John Dumke; convicted of lar- all curves in the track-no matter how sudden or sharp they may be. For the joint next to the engine and tender a metallic coupling is to be used. Evenness of draft and the absolute certainty of removing both smoke and cinders, by carrying to the rear of the train before discharging them in the open air, is secured by the inserting of a blower in the tube to work by the power of the engine and under the immediate control of the engineer, who can operate the same with ease and readiness as the draft of his engine may require. The blower s designed to act in harmony with atmospherc force. In front of the smoke stack is a bell muzzle, properly secured thereto by a suitable casting, having lateral air passages around the stack and discharging the cold air into the tube, carrying the smoke and cinders as they issue from the stack to the blower which forces them through the tube. Along the pipe or tube, at suitable intervals, are lateral inletsone half opening forward and the other half opening to the rear. These inlets are provided with automatic valves on the inside, thus suiting the suction to the direction in which the train is meving, admitting cold air to extinguish the sparks before reaching the end of the tube. When the train is at rest a valve immediately over the stack may be opened, to permit the smoke to pass out naturally; and this valve is also to be opened in case the engi-Benj. Day vs. William E. Robison; judg-nent for plaintiff for $1,305.50.

Provision against heavy winds is made by Provision against heavy winds is made by making the pipe perfectly rigid to the engine and cars. The pipe on the engine is to be made of boiler iron, that on the coaches of sheet iron, and being tastefully finished and ornamented will not detract from the appear ance of a handsome coach. By the use of this invention the cone and net-work in the stack may be done away with, thereby freeing an engine so that she will exhaust with greater ease, acquiring steam more readily and with much less tuel, and the immediate source of a large saving to railway corporations. Another item of no little interest is the doing away with the cones in the Sarah McKim vs. Daniel McKim; decree of stack, as they burn out in a short time and can only be replaced by new ones.

The expense to fit an engine and train of cars will be but trifling in comparison to the saving it insures to the companies and the nuisance to the traveling public which it fully ger train with the device attached thereto may be seen at the County Clerk's office. Mr. Farley says he will dispose of one-third interest in his invention -a splendid opportunity for some one Best fitting and best made youth's Coats and Vests

FEDERAL LEGISLATION. Measures Before Congress.

Representative Townsend, of New York, has introduced a bill to abridge the jurisdiction of Federal courts. The bill simply repeals the right now existing to move causes from State to Federal courts, in cases involving questions in reference to the United States revenue, questions arising under the constitution or any treaty of the United States. One object of the bill is to remove the inconvenience arising to litigants in carrying their cases from State courts to Federal courts. Another object is to aid in reducing the number of cases at present on the docket of the Supreme Court, which now number over 900, the majority of which are of the class contemplated in Mr. Townsend's bill. The Supreme Court is now three years behind in its work.

Mr. Oliver, of Iowa, offers a bill to abolish capital punishment. It provides that death shall not be inflicted for any crime committed against the United States or District of Columbia, nor for any offense hereafter committed by any soldier or mariner in the service of the United States, and that the punishment for crimes hereafter committed which are now by law punished by death shall be imprisonment for life. The same gentleman introduces a bill limiting the duration of patents to five years, and not allowing the entire duration in the case of an extension to exceed fifteen years; also a bill providing for a joint convention of all civilized nations for the purpose of establishing a uniform system of weights and measures. The rise and fall of revenue receipts the rate of taxation remaining the same are believed by economists to give valuable indications of the industrial condition of a country. If this be true, the times are getting no better in the United States, despite the brief spurt of activity this fall. The following official figures obtained from the Treasury Department show a heavy falling-off of revenue from all sources:

Queen Victoria's Family Influence. Victoria always is a good deal spoken about. It is said that she, and none other, untangled the raveled skein between the Prince and Princess of Wales, who are now so much together and apparently so well content with each other that the lady must have relinquished (if she ever entertained) the intention of going to Copenhagen for an indefinite period. The Queen regulates and disciplines her children, just as if they still were boys and girls. Here is a recent instance : Prince Leopold, who is over 24 years old, has been spending the autumn in Scotland. His slightest movements and purposes are telegraphed to Balmoral by one of his suite. On Sunday week, being in a county town in Elginshire, which he had not visited previously, he accepted the polite offer a gentleman of the locality to sit in nis pew, in the Episcopal Church. Just as he was about entering the sacred edifice, a telegram from his royal mother was put into his hand, positively ordering him preferentially to attend divine rship in the Presbyterian Church, and the poor young man had to obe; orders by making a lame apology to the gentleman whose courtesy he was forced o abandon.—Cor. THE ELECTORAL FRAUD. Judge Strong's Remarkable Letter.

[From the Philadelphia Press.] In the Sun of yesterday there appeared a letter from Mr. George W. Jones, of Tennessee, a prominent Congressman from that State before the war, giving the points of a letter he addressed to Judge Strong, of the United Judge Strong in Congress; their rela-tions were those of intimate friends, and they were members of the same political party. He, therefore, felt at liberty to write to Judge Strong with freedom, and he gives the substance of his letter in the

The first desire I had to commit crime came from a dream which I had at John Curtis' some time last year. The dream continued to haunt me. About the 18th of January last another dream came to me. In fact, I was very miserable. Finally, after these dreams had wrought me up to such a pitch I could not resist the inclination to rob, or attempt to rob, I defit one Sunday to the house of Moses Eads to get his money. I did not intend to kill him, or any of his family, but expected that they would be at church, and that I could get the money without interruption. Some of the family were at home, however. I got nothing; whereupon I left, inwardly asking myself, "For what purpose am I here?" Shortly afterward I went to the residence of Mr. William Gentry for the purpose of getting his money by robbery, but in this instance the family were also at home, and I got nothing. The night previous to the commission of the murder of Mrs. Staner and Mrs. Taylor I stayed at the residence of Mr. William Gentry, and did not go near the house of Uncle Mack Staner. Next morning I went to the house of Mrs. Gentry did not go back with me, as Martha Gentry was unwell, and asked her to remain with her. As I was going home it occurred to me that I could get money by going to the house of Uncle Mack Staner. As soon as I had done some little necessary work about the house I went to Uncle Mack's, keeping well in the woods to avoid observation. When I got to the house I found Aunt Harriet
