SUMMER HYGIENE. The Treatment of Children-Some Valu able Hints and Sound Advice. Instead of the usual sermon by the pastor at Plymouth Church, last evening, a lecture on "Summer Hygiene" delivered by Dr. William B. Fletcher. He was introduced in a few well-chosen words by Rev. Oscar C. McCulloch, who expressed the opinion that it was the business of the church to ingle ministry and medicine, and announced that this lecture was the first of a series to be given at intervals on Sunlay evenings upon similar subjects.

Dr. Fletcher said no one could appre iate more keenly than himself the novelty of the situation, and when first asked to lecture in a church on Sunday he was somewhat shocked, as he had never been in a pulpit and rarely in a pew. Perhaps the very fact of addressing a congregation in a close room on such a hot evening was a violation of one of the first laws of hygiene which he would recommend; but he would only speak to them for about half an hour. giving them the result of his study and experience amongst children. Oneourth of the children born die under the age of 5 years, and to a great extent this rate of mortality was due to mis-management. A newly-born child is good stomach and little else. A child must have proper nutriment and proper rest. It must be freed from the regulation bandages which fashion has bound about young children. The custom of handing children about to be admired and petted prevents them from having their proper rest. At the age of 1 year the child is ready almost at the slightest provocation to become the prey of disease. Instead of being supplied with the soft, pulpy, nutritious food for which the stomach is designed, it is often given starchy food, which engenders disease. Another source of disease is found in the custom of giving children evening rides over damp sidewalks, and when there is a great deal of miasma in the air. The plunging of children into cold baths is one of the most fruitful sources of cholera, innmation and intestinal disorders. The same causes result in the same ef fects with the children of rich and poor parents. It is not constant hot or cold weather that cause I disease, but sudden changes of twenty or thirty degrees of temperature when children are unpro tected and exposed are almost certain to produce the dreaded cholera inthe case ceived a light on the line ahead, and be- children the same food acts as a poison. fore his companion was aware of his in- Probably the most important and usetention shut off the steam. FEARFUL FALL.

A Freight Train of Twenty-two Cars on the Panhandle Railroad Plunges from a Bridge Ninety Feet High-Miraculous Escapes and Thrilling Incidents.

[From the Chicago Times.]
A train of twenty-three loaded freight cars approached the high bridge which spans the Tippecanoe river near Monti-cello, Ind., the engine being headed eastward. The cars contained wheat and corn. The engineer slowed the train up as it was nearing the trestle-work connecting with the west end of the bridge. As he did so the bridge-tender mounted the steps of the locomotive and remarked that he would ride to the east end of the structure. A few seconds later the whole of the west span of the bridge, with the engine and twenty-two cars, went crashing into the river. The forward brakeman gives the following account of the descent into the river:

The engine and several cars had passed on to the span, when the fourth car ap-

The couplings did not break, and, as the cars commenced to fall, the loco-The engineer, Louis Beam, opened the throttle to its full capacity, thinking to save his engine by severing the coupling-pin. When he had run his race for life over the tops of thirteen cars, and had seized the brake of the fourteenth, he felt that sinking under his feet. Escape from the awful leap was no longer possible. With a firm grip on the brake, and an eye to the chances for life, he stood still until the car had fallen fifty or seventy-five feet, when he jumped. Among the cars that had preceded him was one which was resting on the bottom of the river in a slanting position. The brakeman struck feet foremost against the inclined surface of the side of the car and shot off into the set; a certain number of bullocks were water as if he had been fired from a allotted to each regiment; and in all the Columbiad. But, before accepting these statistics as a true test of the present condition of business, the circular before us urges some considerations in love!" mitigation of the unfavorable conclusion which would otherwise be inevitable. These considerations are briefly synopsised as consisting of an unusually open winter, retarding sales, deliveries of produce and collections; the discussions in and out of Congress of financial measures, and the necessary condition of uncertainty that resulted; the possibility of important changes in the tariff; the postponement of the date of the repeal of the Bankrupt law, and finally, the steady decline in prices of merchan-dise and the general shrinkage of values, which, it is said, have been more apparent in the past six months than ever before, especially whenever it became necessary to realize. In relation to these points, which are set out at length, the circular says:

"We have thus briefly endeavored to enumerate five leading considerations, which, combined with others always existing, have had a prevailing influence in the past six months toward increasing the figures of failures given above. When it is considered that there are now over 700,000 persons and firms reported in active business by this agency, and of this yast army only a limited number possess a surplus sufficient to withstand such a lengthened period of depression. disappointment and loss as it has been the fate of the country to undergo, it need not be considered as a measure of great disaster that additional circumstances so unfavorable should swell the failure lists to the extent recorded. That isappointment and loss as it has been failure lists to the extent recorded. That these circumstances were only temporary in their duration, and that certain of them may have a tendency to lessen the number of failures hereafter, are points in favor of the future; and, therefore, however discouraging the figures above presented may at first appear, it would be unfair to regard them as an index to the real or permanent condition of the country."
