TEN DAYS IN LOVE.

It was a cold night in January. People were hurrying along through the blinding snow storm, battling with the wind that howled and moaned out by turns its story of woe.

Hugh Remington and his friend Williams, glad to be out of the storm, had settled themselves in gown and slippers for a quiet evening at home. The shutters were closed and the curtains drawn, and on either side of the hearth was placed a favorite chair of each. These friends had lived together in their bachelor quarters for more than two years. Everything in the apartment showed refined taste and wealth. Some said that it all belonged to Hugh and that he made it a home for his friend. No one, however,knew this to be true. Hugh was quiet and reserved, seldom spoke of his affairs to anyone, never laid any special claim to gone by, of little episodes in their lives. Hugh was in a good talking mood and had told several good stories of his past life; stopping suddenly, he ex-

The turning of the corner of a note minus an envelope signifies an apology for sending it without the usual coverng. Such informality is admissible in these days only among intimate friends, and even then it is in taste to employ an envelope. THE FARM. A VEGETABLE GARDEN. ppropriate screens.

How Good a one can the Farmer Have?

[Read before the State Pomological Society, at the Winter meeting, by Eugene Daven-port, of Woodland, Barry County.] How much has been said and written, but how little, really, done about the farmer's garden! When overworked men and women in the city begin to feel that life is becoming a burden, they resort to the country for health and quiet, and force an armis-tice with outraged nature. Here the air is pure, the food simple and healthful. The orchard is visited for its fruits, and the well-kept garden never fails to furnish the most tempting vegetables; life upon the farm is a pas-

That's the way it is in the books. That's the way the poor garden is dragged into publicity in its Sunday clothes, to furnish spice for some lovesick novel. It is all plausible enough and reads beautifully, but, in the generality of cases, is all untrue, and the thing to turn up generally finds it farmer's garden is far from the orderly when he steps on a barrel-hoop. ing. INVESTIGATION PROPOSED.

There is, seemingly, no possible reason why every farmer should not be the possessor of a well-tended, productive garden. But he is not; and a fact is a fact, no matter in what shape it presents itself, and that in spite of all speculation and theorizing. Believing that there are reasons for everything, we are tempted into an investigation, if possible, to discover and suggest remedies. Although I do not expect to say anything new, I hope to hear a full discussion of the topic by those who have had more experience. It were presumption in me to attempt and you can see only one in mine. to tell how to keep a garden, and I Hand me over the stakes."

EXCUSE NOT ACCEPTED. To this end, then, we look first to lifficulties—both real and imaginary that prevent the average farmer from having, throughout the whole season, a choice selection of vegetables, and, l letters" was hit upon to insinuate that, has its "garden spot," and it usually oce, for every farm, large or small. cupies enough territory for a really elaborate affair. I tion of time, aside from that it requires but little time, if properly used, than this: farmers can never urge want of time as an excuse for the neglect of the garden and general tidiness of the place, as long as so much time is absolutely wasted by the farming class; wasted both by squandering time, and, what is almost as bad, unnecessary labor, from the want of definite plans. Want of time, therefore, is not a real difficulty but an imaginary one; let us

CONCLUSION.

The question is, however, "How good a vegetable garden can the farmer afford to have?" As I have eliminated want of time from among the difficulties, the question is practically answered viz.: that as soon as he knows how to keep it he can afford an indefinitely good one, and can keep such an one cheaper and easier than he could a poor one before. I believe that in this and in everything else our difficulties are mostly reminders of our want of and all vegetables that suit his taste. But the question of how extensive a garden he can afford to keep is still unanswered, and it is a point that I hope to hear discussed. It seems to me that its extent should be limited to the supply of his own table; that he can The thrifty pigweed bends to say "How d'ye do" to the sweet corn, and the onions, and the cabbages, and the ford to become the market gardener. beets, and the lettuce, are struggling in Let him make gardening his avocation, and not allow it to intrude upon his farm proper. Ashes, lime, muck, old leaves, etc., are always valuable. If the orchard is young, and just planted out, a few years of thorough cultivation is very important. Corn, potatoes or other hoed crops may be planted with profit if the soil is rich as the soil of a young orchard should be, but wheat, oats, barley or meadow should be very decidedly avoided. Such crops are such absorbers of the moisture of the soil that young trees will seldom thrive while growing in connection with them. One of the greatest losses that the fruit grower sustains in the raising of fruit for market purposes is an injudi cious selection of varieties. This is a very important subject, and a subject, too, that even those who have devoted some attention, and have had more or less experience in the cultivation of fruit, unfortunately, to some considerable extent, disagree. A committee appointed by the Grand River Valley one hundred trees for winter market win nor a Russet, but thirty Canada Pleasants, ten Ben Davis, etc., while I E. Curry-Combs.

A correspondent of the Ohio Farmer ays: A great many farmers make a mistake in buying their curry-combs.

P. B. RICHARDSON. TUSCOLA, Feb., 26. Plant Grape Vines. From the Journal of Chemistry.

It is surprising that so many families in the country are willing to live year after year without cultivating a single grape vine about their dwellings. They are compelled to purchase the delicious fruit for the table, or not taste it during the season. There is a common impression that to cultivate grapes properly a vast amount of knowledge is required. To many the simple trimming of a vine is a mystery more difficult to comprehend than the hardest problem of Euclid. This is an erroneous view, and ought not to prevail. Any person of common intelligence can learn in one hour how to trim and nourish vines, and if instruction cannot be obtained from some experienced cultivator, there are books filled with cuts and illustrations which make everything plain. Three vines, of as many different varieties, planted in some sunny nook, or by the side of buildings, so as to obtain shelter, will, it properly cared for, furnish many bushels of delicious grapes every year. Select a Concord, a Delaware and an Adirondack, make the ground mellow and rich by the use of the spade, and by employing old manure, fine ground bone and ashes, and set out the plants. In three years the rich clusters will appear, and in four years the product will be abundant. It is well to have vines planted so that the waste liquids from the dwelling can be used in fertilization. If there is any food the vine specially loves, it is soapy liquids which accumulate on washing days in families. Vines drenched every week with these liquids will flourish astonishingly, and extend themselves so as Keene knew nothing of the transaction until Friday afternoon, and repudiates the entire sale, which compels the repurchase by Fisher & Co. of the amount sold on his account. Keene says he had no intension of making any sales of grain at present, and certainly not at 93 cents per bushel. The message was sent through the Atlantic and Pacific Company, and, Keene states, was evidently the work of an agent in New York of Chicago parties. From Our Own Correspondent.

LANSING, March 7, 1879. The tenth week of the session is drawing to a close, and has been one of pretty close attention to business. The ommittees are emptying their pigeon holes of the bills thrust away there some weeks ago, cleaning away the dust, and either consigning the unborn or less favorable notice of the Senate and House. From present indications unsained even by trained at lets. temperament and not disposed to indulge in any revolutionary legislation of any sort. They do a good deal more in the way of amending old laws than of repealing them and passing new one, and it is, doubtless, fortunate for the State that it should be so. Several bills have been introduced for this purpose, but the one which seems to meet with most favor is that of Senator Cham-berlain. It provides for a board of control to consist of five members, three of whom shall be women, who shall be appointed by the Governor and confirmed by the Senate, the members of which board shall hold their offices for the term of five years and until their successors are appointed, one of whom shall hold the office for the term of one year, one for two years, one for three years, one for four years and one for five years from the date of appointment, and their term shall be designated in their appointment. JOHNNY APPLESEED.

The Frontier Orchard-Planter, Philanthropist and Missionary.

Correspondence New York Evening Post. Jonathan Chapman was born in Boston about the year 1775. How he drifted from that point to the wilds of western Pennsylvania, where he was first known to have indulged his peculiar monomania for the planting of apple-trees in the wilderness, is not known. The rapid settlement of that part of the country, however, soon drove him further westward. In 1801 he entered the territory of Ohio with a horse-load of appleseeds, gathered from the cider-presses of western Pennsylvania; coming first to Licking county and planting his seeds in many fertile spots on and about the banks of Lickng creek. For the next five years he disappeared, passing the period, doubt-less, in the establishment of other nurseries in a different quarter. In 1805 he was seen by a pioneer settler of Jefferson county, drifting slowly down the Ohio river in two canoes lashed together and loaded with apple These he was transporting seeds. westward, for the purpose of creating orchards upon the furthest verge of white settlement. Entering the Mussingum river at Marietta, he passed by various tributaries to the head of navigation in Ashland county.

Johnny selected the most fertile spots in the rich loamy grounds on the banks of the creeks for his purpose; planting often as high as 16 bushels of seed to the acre; and enclosing the grounds with a slight fence or guard of brush. He then left the place until he trees had in a measure grown. The old settlers describe the margins of the streams upon which these early nurseries were planted as thickly covered over with a low matted growth of imber, while near the water's edge a rank mass of long grass interlaced with morning-glory and wild-pea vines, among which drooping willows and clustering elders stood like sentinels on the outpost of civilization. The canoe voyage of 1806 appears to have been the only occasion upon which Johnny adopted that method of transportation, all his other journeys having been made on foot over the old trail leading from Fort Duquesne to Detroit by way of Fort Sandusky, mown as "the second route through the wilderness of Ohio." Having planted one stock of seeds, he would eturn to Pennsylvania for another, athering them from the cider-presses t different places. These seeds he onveyed to their destination in rude eathern bags, in place of linen ones, the dense growth of underbrush and oriers encountered upon the way makng the use of some more durable fabric necessary. Sometimes the bags found transportation on the bank an aged or broken-down horse which their owner had mercifully rescued from harder usage, but more frequenty on his own sturdy shoulders. When the trees were ready for sale, ohnny either sold them himself, at a

some one to sell for him. And in this matter of sales he was as methodical as any merchant. If the customer was too poor to purchase trees, which frequently happened, he got them withut pay; if in better circumstances, but estitute of ready cash, Johnny made some convenient trade, taking old clothing or a supply of corn-meal in exchange; but if the owner was wello-do Johnny demanded money, which he was seldom without. His general custom, however, was to take a note payable at some indefinite period. Having received it he troubled himself no further about the payment, considering the transaction at an end, as, indeed, it generally was. Caring little for money and with very limited personal wants he frequently came into possession, by the sale of trees, of more money than he cared to keep. This he soon disposed of in gifts to some poor family, struggling against the misfortunes common to a life on the border, in the purchase of doctrinal books of the Swedenborgian faith for gratuitous or heard of an animal being abused, he at once purchased it, and gave it to some more humane farmer, stipulating for its kindly treatment. The severe labors incident to a rough frontier life often maimed or disabled horses, which otherwise a burden to their owners, were turned loose to die. Whenever Johnny heard of such an animal he immediately made diligent search for it, and, bargaining for its proper care during the winter, led it away in the summer to some rich pasture which he had found in his wandering. In this way he often collected a considerable drove of animals, convalescent members of which he persistently refused to sell, but readily gave away to such persons as bound themselves solemnly death upon any creature as an almost unpardonable sin. His conception of the heinousness of this sin, too, was not limited to the higher forms of life, but extended to the minutest insect, and to its mere disturbance or inconveniences. One cool autumnal night. while lying by his camp-fire in the woods, he observed that the mosquitoes blew into the flames and were burned. Taking the huge tin dipper, which answered the double purpose of cup and mush-pot, from his head, he illed it with water and quenched the fire, remarking afterward, "God forbid that I should build a fire for my comfort which should be the means of destroying any of his creatures!" At another time he made his camp-fire at the end of a hollow log in which he intended to pass the night; but finding t occupied by a bear and her cubs, he emoved the fire to the other end, and slept in the snow rather than disturb the bears. Walking one morning over small prairie he was bitten by a ratlesnake. Some time afterward a friend inquired of him about the matter. He drew a long sigh, and replied; "Poor fellow! he only just touched me, when , in an ungodly passion, put the heel of my scythe on him and went home." Again, while assisting in the construction of a road through the woods, a hornet whose nest had been destroyed prehending his words. So anxious ras he that every one should read his ooks, and so limited was their numper, that he devised an original method by which one book was converted into a serial. Dividing a volume into many pieces, each containing a single chapter, he left one at a log-house, and on a subsequent visit furnished another fragment, continuing this process unil the whole book had been read. In this way he was enabled to furnish reading matter to several families at the same time, the only drawback to the process lying in the fact that the irst instalment given to some illiterate backwoodsman happened to be the last fraction of the volume, and the unfortunate recipient was thus compelled to read the book through backward.

The personal appearance of Chapman was as singular as his character

He was a small, wiry man, quick, and estless in his motions and conversation; his beard, though not long, was unshaven; his hair was long and dark and his eyes black and sparkling. He ived the roughest life, camping out in the woods, or, if sleeping in a house, occupying the floor. He dress was an indescribable medley, composed of the cast-off clothing he had taken in ex-change for apple-trees. In later years ne seemed to think even this kind of second-hand raiment too laxurious, and wore as his principal garment an old coffee sack in the bottom and sides of which he cut holes to thrust his head and arms through. This he pronounced "a very serviceable cloak, and as good clothing as any man need wear. He scarcely ever wore shoes, except in winter but, if traveling in the summer time, and the rough road hurt his feet, he would make himself a rude pair of sandals. He never purchased any covering for his feet. When he used anything in the form of boots or shoes they were cast-off things, generally unmated, which he would gather up, however dilapidated they might e, always insisting that it was a sin o throw aside a boot or shoe so long as it would adhere to a human foot. His head-gear was constructed on a like economical principle. For a long time he wore the large tin dipper in which he cooked his mush while traveling. But, as it failed sufficiently to protect his eyes from the sun, he constructed a hat of paste-board, with an immense peak in front, and bent down at the sides to shade his face from the heat; thus securing an article that combined usefulness with economy, and which became his permanent fashion. The same close economy Johnny carried into all the phases of bis life, extending it to his diet, which was as meagre as his clothing. He believed it to be a sin to kill any creature for food, holding that the soil produced verything requisite for human sub-Among his other eccentricities was that of bearing pain with more than Indian fortitude. His nervous sensioility seems to have been less acute than these of ordinary mortals; for if he had a cut or sore, his method of treatment was first to sear it with a red-hot iron, and then cure it as a burn. This fortitude, together with his strange appearance and eccentric actions, led the Indians, among whom he wandered unmolested, to regard him as a great "medicine-man," and to treat him with much kindness. During the war of 1012, when the frontier settlers were hunted down by the savage allies of Great Britain, Johnny travelled night and day, warning the people of approaching danger. Visiting every abin, he delivered this message: "The spirit of the Lord is upon me, and has annointed me to blow the trumpet in the wilderness and sound the alarm in the forest; for behold the tribes of the heathen are round about your doors, and a devouring flame followeth arte them." Denying himself food or rest,

Thus this strangely clad, eccentric character wandered for years through the forests and border settlements, caring for his scattered nurseries and preading the tenets of his peculiar faith. Leading a blameless and moral ife, he likened himself to the primitive hristians, literally taking no thought for the morrow. It was this convic-tion that made him at all times serenely happy. Upon one occasion an itin-erant preacher was holding forth on the public square in Mansfield in a ong and somewhat tedious discourse upon the sin of extravagance; frequently emphasizing his text by the nquiry, "Where now is the barefooted Christian traveling to heaven?" Johnnie, who was lying on his back in some timber, taking the question in its literal sense, raised his bare feet in the air and vociferated, "Here's your prim-

In 1838 Johnny took a solemn farewell of all the families in this part of the state, following his vocation for the next nine years on the border of Ohio and Indiana. In 1847 he died in the cabin of a settler near Fort Wayne, at the age of seventy-two years, 46 of which had been devoted to his self-imposed mission. The physician who was present at his death was heard to inquire what was Johnny Appleseed's religion; he had never seen a man in so placid a state at the approach of

It is a question and a very serious furance even by trained athletes should be allowed to form a public how. Humane people interfere to prevent a horse from being driven to leath, and there is equal reason why they should interfere to prevent a man from walking himself to death. The excuse that man does it voluntarily is equally applicable to the quadruped or a race-horse will go till he drops. But, however that may be, there is no question that untrained men or unfit nen should not be allowed to emulate these feats, and that at every long-disance walk a physician should be kept in attendance, upon whose declaration withdrawn. As the time passed by and the manuscript for the second volume was not forthcoming, it was openly stated that the matter had been out in the hands of counsel, with instructions to sue Mr. Beecher for damges. The counsel, when questioned bout it, denied the truth of the statement. It seems, however, that the matter was not dropped, but that such suit has really been begun in the Superior Court of New York. Wilkeson figures as the plaintiff and Mr. Beecher as the defendant.
